Bodies Transition; Legacies Are Eternal

1/9/01—#1 (14-146)

RE: (1) WALLY GENTLEMAN; (2) IDAHO OBSERVER AND FEDS. HORROR TALE OF "MALTREATMENT OF HEALER".

WALLY GENTLEMAN

BODIES CHANGE; LEGACIES LIVE FOREVER

Hatonn—An old friend exchanged your world for mine on the Sixth day of January 2001. Welcome HOME, Wally. I further ask that [his wife] Margaret be always known as to location and abode, for I have made commitments to Wally. Thank you.

It is appropriate that as you think of some coincidences which "happen", let us be aware that there are NO COINCIDENCES—only lack of being able to connect the sequences. And, therefore, it will always now be remembered that one of Wally's great achievements in the special effects of one, 2001 SPACE

ODYSSEY, you who are in the industry shall never forget.

The follow on of Wally's passage must also be connected to loss of A.C. Ekker to the one project most noted by Wally's ongoing visions, SIPAPU ODYSSEY. Is there a connection? Yes, indeed, for with A.C.'s demise there came such a gap in ability to structure and overcome the logistics handling of the picture itself as to be staggering—which in turn was devastatingly disappointing to Wally Gentleman.

Yes, we may very well change out the script now and relocate possibilities for siting.

The world has lost one more man of honor and integrity. Therefore, people, give careful and prayerful attention to this "loss"—for, indeed, you are running out of time to rectify the negative things come upon your place.

Wally Gentleman was one of my very closest FRIENDS and colleagues and he is, indeed, honored in the hallowed halls of insightful and, yes, SPIRITUAL, men of your time and someone who will be, as others have been, all but ignored in the passage of note or attention, for you have grown callused and hard. THE DREAM

SHALL NOT PERISH—NOT EVEN FROM THE FACE OF THE EARTH.

To you, as in Dharma, who think the load and loss too great to overcome one after the other—yes, you can and shall, for if all quit in the face of hurt, there ceases to be hope and GOD IS HOPE!

Please make sure that Little Crow is informed as well as some of the closer contacts who were gifted with knowing Wally—and that most especially now, includes Dr. Al Overholt.

And, readers, please realize that when ones set forth to destroy another, as in the SPECTRUM group's assaults and thefts, lies and "turning in to Federal authorities" in intent to further bring down God's very plan for positive growth—THEY ARE HURTING "YOU". I suggest that all of you look at YOUR own mortality and consider or reconsider the direction you have chosen.

I SALUTE WALLY GENTLEMAN AND I THANK HIM FOR CAUSING ME TO GIVE INFORMATION WHICH, THOUGH PERSONAL IN CONTENT, CAN SERVE YOU ALL.

GOD HAS MERCY BUT DO YOU?

The following is to bring into focus something which, as with all things, connects in a most personal way, seemingly disconnected context.

In the health section of November/December 2001 SPOTLIGHT you will find an article which SHOULD capture your attention—but most of you will not even recognize the point I might make here, so I ask you to pay attention and then, perhaps, you may wish to write or e-mail some letters.

This article to be offered is THE SAME THING DELIBERATELY PERPETRATED ON OUR OWN PEOPLE THROUGH THE RAIDS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ON NEW GAIA AND SPECIFICALLY ON DIANE AND DELIBERATELY INCLUSIVE OF EKKERS. THESE THINGS WERE ACCOMPLISHED THROUGH TOTAL BETRAYAL OF TRUST AND, ACTUALLY, CRIMINAL ACTS AND FALSE AFFIDAVITS REGARDING COMPUTER RECORDS, ETC., BY SUCH AS RICK MARTIN-CORTRIGHT AND SPECTRUM BUDDIES.

How can I claim that Rick Martin is involved? Because he has said he is. Source affidavits also tell the tale as do past modus operandi.

Now, I want you to see some connections with what I next offer and then let us look closely at the LOOP in potential possibilities.

First the article referred to above:

[QUOTING SPOTLIGHT, “Here’s to Your Health!” Nov./Dec. 2000:]

MALTREATMENT OF JAILED HEALER CONTINUES

By Don Harkins

After being sent to prison for the crime of helping people, the developer of a harmless and effective treatment for a neurological dysfunction continues to receive terrible treatment.

[H: DON HARKINS IS THE EDITOR OF THE IDAHO OBSERVER. What a tangled web you weave when... He is also the co-editor (Tom Valentine is Editor), of “HERE’S TO YOUR HEALTH! AND, YES, IT IS IMPORTANT.]

After his Oct. 19 conviction for violating Food and Drug Administration (FDA) labeling laws, Liquid Deprenyl Citrate (LDC) developer Jay Kimball, 60, while in the custody of the U.S. Marshals Service, was handcuffed, waist-chained, leg-ironed and, for no apparent reason, transported 150 miles from the Hillsborough County Jail (HCJ) to the Hendry County Jail in LaBelle, Fla.

Kimball was returned to HCJ Nov. 20 with numerous injuries.

An HCJ employee reportedly stated that Kimball must have been transported in error as, considering his age and the nature of his conviction, he should never have been sent to LaBelle.

LaBelle is a facility that has been described as a deplorable, inhuman and bacteria-infested hellhole.

Kimball was sentenced by Florida District Federal Judge Richard Lazzara to serve 13 years for “misbranding” LDC—a crime which would ordinarily earn [at maximum] a three-year prison stay.

On one hand the judge said to the prosecutors, “you had thousands of names and phone numbers, you failed to produce one complaint of harm or loss; to the contrary I have seen testimony and received letters about how good the product is. No harm done.”

Then on the other hand he stated: “Mr. Kimball does not respect authority; he does not respect the law.”

Lazzara also stated that Kimball’s actions were “anarchy” in order to justify sentencing Kimball to serve more than four times the federal sentencing guidelines for such a crime.

Though the FDA has been persecuting Kimball since LDC became available to victims of degenerative diseases such as Parkinson’s in 1990, the federal agency admits that there has never been one consumer complaint or even one reported adverse reaction attributable to LDC.

To the contrary, the court and the FDA have been provided with the results of 3,000 clinical case studies conducted by the University of Toronto which proved the product’s safety and efficacy. The court was also provided hundreds of letters from LDC users who have had their quality of life returned to them with the help of the natural nutritive product derived from the ephedra plant.

After Lazzara arbitrarily passed sentence on Kimball based primarily on his defiance of non-scientific federal authority, U.S. marshals took custody of the 60-year-old man and justified further abuse with a false charging report produced by the Hillsborough County Sheriff’s Department

The report, which follows Kimball through the “justice” system, stated as of Nov. 11 that Kimball had been convicted in federal court for manufacturing, distributing, dispensing and possessing cocaine.

According to Kimball, the speedometer in the transport van containing six male and two female prisoners with no seat belts in the vehicle except for the marshals, reportedly reached 100 miles per hour as it careened through traffic en route to LaBelle.

Kimball was catapulted out of his seat two times and suffered injuries to his shoulder for which he was denied medical attention when he arrived at the LaBelle facility. He also lost his voice and experienced difficulty breathing but was not allowed to see a doctor the entire time he was behind bars in LaBelle.

U.S. Marshal Vasquez, one of the transport deputies, subjected Kimball to a five-minute stream of extremely profane verbal abuse in front of LaBelle officials immediately prior to Kimball’s return trip to Tampa, Kimball said. During the return trip Vasquez caused Kimball to fall again and injured his tailbone. Kimball did receive proper medical attention upon his return to HCJ.

Robin Hill of the U.S. Marshals Service office in Tampa refused to comment on her agency’s treatment of Kimball but she did see to it that the charging report was changed.

The report, which is available on-line at <http://www.heso.tampa.fl.us/>, has been changed to reflect a conviction for the manufacture, distribution and possession of “synthesized narcotics”—which is also false as Kimball was not convicted of that crime and LDC is not a synthesized narcotic.

The U.S. Marshals Service is apparently insistent upon incorrectly identifying the nature of Kimball’s conviction so that hardened prison officials who only know Kimball by what the “official” report tells them will treat him in the worst possible manner.

In the court of common sense, Kimball was convicted in federal court for helping people to overcome degenerative disease without federal approval. Since his conviction for having the courage to continue helping people regardless of his own safety, he has been physically and mentally tormented by a prison system that “believes” him to be a convicted drug manufacturer and dealer.

For more information or verification of this example of how the federal government really views its citizens, call Don Harkins of The Idaho Observer at (208) 255-2307.

[END OF QUOTING]

A few dirty tricks? Well, this is EXACTLY what you have in the attack on New Gaia—ONLY WITHOUT ANY SUCH BLATANT THING AS EVEN SYNTHESIZING ANYTHING.

How far will the adversary go? As far as he is allowed to go, my friends.

So what? Why the bother to present THIS tale of woe? Because it should be noted that THE IDAHO OBSERVER ADVERTISED in SPECTRUM. You will find the ad on page 12, within the “News Desk” by Dr. Al Overholt, November 7, 2000.

It probably means that Dr. Overholt utilized material from that paper in Idaho and simply ran source information. However, it needs to be noted to both SPOTLIGHT and THE IDAHO OBSERVER that persons out of SPECTRUM ARE ACTUALLY PARTICIPANTS IN TURNING IN PATRIOTS AND HEALTH PRODUCT PERSONS.

The Feds actually terrified and intimidated both Diane of New Gaia and her attorney IN MEETINGS, asking for evidence to be turned against Ekkers who they claim may be guilty of Drug Trafficking and Money Laundering. If Diane would “turn evidence” against her parents, they would drop the charges against her for possibly having left the words “Food Supplement” off a colloid for which machines for making same are sold internationally.

Now, they have affidavits signed by people right in Tehachapi who claimed to KNOW “THESE COMPUTERS WERE USED FOR RECORDS AND DISTRIBUTION OF DRUGS...”. How many people do you think had access to “these computers”? Ah, indeed, ONLY ONE! Moreover, the ONE in point was a Founding member of the Board of Directors of NEW GAIA. Wow, the plot thickens? These are shades of the connections with the Associated Press in which dirty tricks were played and PRINTED internationally that “Doris Ekker, who claims to be Jesus Christ...” were printed around the globe. That would go right back to the doorsteps of George Abbott, David Horton and George Green of Nevada (and by the way, IDAHO.) Abbott and Horton are both officers of the court and still could get away with gross violation of ethics and lying in court.

It is known, further, that the assault of Ekkers, New Gaia and CONTACT were orchestrated DIRECTLY ACCORDING TO THE PLAN LAID FORTH BY ONE, JASON BRENT, ESQ. “TO” GEORGE GREEN. THOSE THINGS HAVE BEEN PUT TO PRESS BY, NO LESS THAN, RICK MARTIN IN CONTACT, SO TO SAY YOU ARE “NOT AWARE” IS A FOOLISH THING, INDEED, RICK.

Surely, no one thought, really, that you could trust the powers-that-are would keep yourself ANONYMOUS—or did you?

Well, I herein offer, as presented in SPECTRUM, the contact information for The Idaho Observer, while Tom Valentine can be reached through SPOTLIGHT.

[The Idaho Observer is a monthly, 24-page newspaper dedicated to the truth. For a complimentary copy, please write: P.O. Box 457, Spirit Lake, Idaho, 83869; or call: (208) 255-2307. ($1 postage is appreciated but not necessary. E-mail: observer@dmi.net web: www.proliberty.com/observer.] It appears, however, that somehow The Idaho Observer paid for advertising in SPECTRUM since SPECTRUM has been pushing for advertising to save the paper.

Now let me turn to other “coincidences” beyond belief.

Look at Liquid Deprenyl Citrate (LDC) first. All it is is a natural product and where it would be used would only allow for enhanced neuron connections in a rather complex neuron system.

The Liquid Deprenyl Citrate (LDC) is not really in point here, other than that it would simply enhance the connections such as synapses of the neural system—but this is EXACTLY WHY I asked that the very TECHNICAL paper given to dharma be reprinted and it was done so in CONTACT in the November 15, 2000 edition when speaking of Gaiandriana (Living Drias). I specifically wrote the paper for Dr. Wendell Hoffman with copies for technical comment regarding the “electric” movement of such crystalline cells within the body’s electrical system. I also made SURE Dr. Al Overholt was included in the technical loop.

You need to understand that LDC borders on that which can greatly enhance an immune system which could assist in the T-cell system as it experiences in AIDS. And, no, I DID NOT say heal OR cure anything. It also would automatically be a major tool in those suffering with Alzheimer’s. So, it makes more sense, doesn’t it, that there might be a wish to squish anyone who has a positive potential help for suffering humanity? YOU will not be allowed to present anything which might interfere with the depopulation of the globe.

I can also speak directly to Dr. Hoffman, please. Elements are scattered through the chemtrail grids and flow along the pulse waves that so alter the frequencies that to try to accomplish anything—as in “frequency” system of “broadcasting” to eradicate insect production or to rebalance energy systems—is all but impossible. Furthermore, when you have a person able to achieve this gifted capability you have to know that you are STOPPED at every turn, for it is an “invisible” ability which MUST NOT BE ALLOWED. The effort must be removed as to “worms” in the focus to broadcasting to the trees themselves as to energy frequency and the trees can heal themselves. This is not lack of ability, Wendell; it is interference intentionally utilized. Think about what I say and you will know what needs be done through you. Sometimes saving the trees is NOT the point at all. Bless you, Wendell, and know that each and all get sometimes distracted and deliberately misled when possible. I cannot get more technical than this but there are elements in the seeds of some of the fruit trees that could be utilized in the groundwater for the trees which would be carried in the sap and vermin would be disrupted in their life-cycle while the toxic substance (to the insect larvae) would simply be taken up in the seed as naturally processed. Therefore, you might wish to try frequency isolation of apricot seeds and see if you can reap a bit of reward.

If you have cherries and apples—then you have capability of other fruit sustainability. Natural frequency, as you know, is as unique to plants and fruit as to human individuals, or animal life of any kind. I can’t comment further on the matter of the fruit trees, please.

But back to our former topic:

In any cell enhancer or immune-system enhancer you are not doing anything abnormal or remotely “drug- or medicine-oriented”. You are basically talking about crystalline substances and specifically nucleotides. Nucleotides are purines, or pyrimidines, with either ribose or deoxyribose and a phosphate group. In the nucleic acid’s structure, the sugar portion of the nucleotide is bonded to the sugar portion of the next, by means of a phosphate group attached to both. This is WHY you cannot work specifically with DNA alone but must always consider RNA.

A sugar phosphate backbone runs the length of the molecule in point, and from it extends purines and pyrimidines, one to each nucleotide. Nucleoproteins consist of two parts of large macromolecules.

By the way, even the use of the term “synthetic” is foolishness. It is much as NaCl (salt)—you can’t have a “synthetic” but rather, only a reproduction of a basic elemental combination.

The only real difference, for instance, in Gaiandriana and AquaGaia is that “the sugar phosphate backbone” referred to is a deliberate bonding with “sugar”. However, after maturing, the end result is read by technical apparatus as WATER—even though you can watch the addition of the minerals, vitamins, and see the process taking place. This results in a “perfect” cell.

I am not going to belabor these issues. It is far better to switch than fight—that is, switch from making an effort to assist mankind in any given focus to simply stopping the effort of enlightening anyone.

Now, anyone thinking the adversary isn’t working overtime to save his wicked kingdom—YOU HAD BETTER LOOK AGAIN.

And, yes, indeed, it makes even a Third World country look GOOD in those avenues of ability to function. Ekkers are hounded constantly for sharing in these products which can be both utilized and offered (from light therapy to anything in the natural field) right here in the Philippines.

We have a contact now, LESTER, who knows exactly where a RIFE microscope is in use. Now wouldn’t it be wondrous to connect our people with such as Lester and B. James and let them perfect some of the more hidden apparatus in manifest form?

That is not Ekkers’ problem, readers. Why should Ekkers pay for any assistance “I” might offer?

My point? I believe that you who work in this immediate struggle get in touch with The Idaho Observer and DEMAND attention to the Tehachapi New Gaia spectacle [and its cause] and get to the bottom thereof—right up through SPOTLIGHT.

THE ENEMY IS AMONG YOU!

We have NEVER made “healing” claims other than that some tools assist in the HEALING OF SELF.

The human body is an “electric” apparatus and is made up of EVERY element in your globe and in your atmosphere. This is why the “rare earth” mineral elements are helpful in that some of them are not produced in commercial products. This is why Poslin is wondrous—because it is not offered in mineral products but is absolutely mandatory in “perfect” cell fluid. This is WHY the COLLOIDS OF MINERALS, ETC., are so necessary, for they interchange with CELLS and WITHIN CELLS—NATURALLY AND WITHOUT ANY POSSIBILITY OF OVERUSE—FOR THE BODY WILL ONLY UTILIZE THAT WHICH IT NEEDS AND DISCARD THE REST.

I am amazed that your physicians will actually place into the very blood stream itself, dead blood (transfusion), dead serum, glucose water, distilled water, saline water and you name it—but deny the use of that which could circulate oxygen, rehydrate a dehydrated body and actually introduce that which could disable microbes of the worst kind. If this is not a method of controlling the drug industry (medicines) and the Medical Profession (doctors), then show me a more focused enterprise.

Everyone wonders “what can I do?” Well, you can stop this insanity being dumped on New Gaia for starters. When a young MOTHER with two small children is in fear of incarceration by the Federal agents and agencies through results of lies, criminal thieves and betrayers of truth—it is YOU WHO HAVE ALLOWED IT.

Yes, indeed, you have come “a long way, baby” as the cigarette ads go—A VERY LONG WAY, INDEED.

By the way, the Feds also say they got much of their incriminating information from Dr. Young’s INTERNET SITES—how interesting!

My suggestion? That a few of you sit with Diane and GET THE STORY and then write a professional paper on WHAT IS. Every citizen in the world needs to KNOW what is going on and WHY the world is in such horrendous circumstances. And KNOW that this may well appear “petty” but in the sheer pettiness you will recognize that that which we do is of incredibly MAJOR importance that such effort would be expended to stop it.

Worse yet, it will go all the way back through persons at Nevada Corporate Headquarters and false affidavits offered as under perjury oath to the courts by one, Brent Moorhead regarding contracts, etc., of which he claimed he lost MILLIONS of dollars. Oh? How so? LIES DO NOT THE TRUTH MAKE—BUT ACCEPTANCE OF LIES IS THE INTENT OF THE LIARS. YOU HAVE BECOME A MIND-CONTROLLED SPECIES.

Will the new U.S. President, Bush, see his opportunities of possibility for greatness? Free-will will determine such opportunities.

The IMF this very day is presenting a need for further reduction by the FED of interest rates. The world is in full potential for economic collapse at the hands of the thugs and thieves.

Will anyone DARE to do anything positive—or is the citizenry of the globe now sand-ostriches? Yes, but the outcome is up to YOU.

What can YOU do? You start right where you ARE with what you have and the rest will follow. Or, hide your eyes and ears and refuse to learn TRUTH while continuing in the blind orchestration of the very adversary himself through his dutiful receivers and presenters pretending to be in the service and NAME OF GOD.

Can my people take it? They have thus far! They can—CAN YOU?

Honesty Is The Foundation Of Meritorious Government

1/5/01—#1 (14-142)

[H: I must interrupt this presentation to ask you to REALIZE, please, that this is going to be more and more directly relative to the Philippine Islands (as a nation). For this reason and this reason alone we will continue our copy to the paper. The facts are that at the founding of the U.S. Constitution, most of the items were built therein—and directly thieved from the Native American-established “constitutions”. Since, however, our push is to merge our programs IN THE PHILIPPINES, we must continue right along with the establishment of both generalities and narrower, specifically-oriented possibilities. This (the Philippines) is a THIRD World nation and spiraling constantly deeper into the hopeless pit of despair. THIS, however, is WHY our program can and must be established in such a place—for ALL aspects of society are involved in chaos and actual collapse.]

[QUOTING:]

MERITOCRACY OF THE MASSES

By Elly Velez Pamatong, Esq.

(PART 7)

CHAPTER 6

EXECUTIVE REFORM

“The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest.”—Thomas Jefferson, 1774

OFFICES OF THE PRESIDENT. The president shall have offices in Mindanao, Cebu, and Manila. And he shall spend four months in each of these offices so that he will be accessible to the masses.

To check the president, he shall be subject to recall by the House of Governors. In fact, every public official should be subject to recall.

DEPARTMENT OF STUDENT AFFAIRS. As has been discussed earlier, there is a need to maintain a continuing dialogue between the government and studentry. Generally, the cause of student unrest is triggered by the absence of an effective channel of communication between the students and the office of the President.

Moreover, and since these students are the future leaders of the land, their access to the office of the President will prepare them for leadership.

Preferably, the head of this office shall be the President of the National Union of Students of the Philippines or the head of a similar student organization or any person with a vast prior experience in the field of student activism.

Likewise, the Legislative Branch may seriously consider the need for active student participation and involvement in its proceedings. For additional comments on this subject, please refer to previous pages.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN THE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT AND OTHER IMPORTANT SECTORS OF SOCIETY, INCLUDING DISSIDENT ORGANIZATIONS. There is a need for the Executive Branch of the government to open and maintain a continuing dialogue with other important sectors of society—e.g., the Integrated Bar of the Philippines, etc.—and dissident organizations, e.g., the MILF and the CPP-NPA. Without doubt, a continuing dialogue with these organizations will enhance and promote a climate of peace and order. For further discussion on this proposal, please see previous pages.

DEFENSE. Except for the Philippine Air Force, the Navy, the Presidential Guard Battalion, and the Engineering Battalion, the rest of the Armed Forces of the Philippines shall be restructured. Positive steps shall be taken towards the building of a highly professionalized Citizens Army.

The Navy is needed for our vast territorial waters while the Air Force is also needed to protect our boundaries. Also, all police forces throughout the Philippines should be abolished. However, to maintain peace and order, we must professionalize the barrio police. Peace and order shall be substantially left in the hands of the barrio people, under the command of the barrio captains. This approach can save the government a lot of money.

BIR AND BUREAU OF CUSTOMS. For a given number of years, these corruption-ridden bureaus may be run or administered by interfaith committees. All present employees shall be audited and—if found to be corrupt—terminated.

Representatives from all religious sectors shall be invited to assist running these bureaus for, say, 3 years, and compare the income of said bureaus under interfaith committees with previous revenues generated by former government officials. Then, the government shall gradually develop a system that can run these bureaus completely free of corrupt practices.

DATE OF INDEPENDENCE. One of the worst blunders that ever took place in this country was the changing of our independence date from July 4, 1946 to June 12, 1898. Even worse was the celebration of our “Centennial” on June 12, 1998.

The fact is: General Aquinaldo was not in control of an independent government, much less a country, when he declared “independence” on June 12, 1898. He was in hiding when he made such declaration and, after that, he continued hiding until he was captured in Palanan, Isabela in 1901.

Francisco Dagohoy, Sultan Kudarat and Lapu Lapu were—by any standard—more independent than General Aquinaldo. Lapu Lapu, King of Mactan, in a daring and heroic act of independence, killed the very first White intruder, Ferdinand Magellan, when the latter attempted to invade his territorial domain. Dagohoy of Bohol led an independent island for more than 88 years. Whereas the Great Sultan Kudarat of Mindanao ruled an independent sultanate for many years and won in all his battles against the Whites during his lifetime.

Again, and unlike General Aquinaldo, these three great Malayan leaders openly exercised acts of independence, and did not hide from their enemies. Unlike Aquinaldo—none of them were captured by a foreign power. Sultan Kudarat, in particular, was recognized as a ruler of an independent sultanate by the Dutch and other foreign countries. Whereas Aquinaldo’s government-in-hiding was not recognized by any foreign power, much less by the entire inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

But even assuming that we were, in fact, “independent” on June 12, 1898, was it historically appropriate to celebrate our “Centennial” on June 12, 1998? What happened to the 48 years of our dependence on the United States? Was 48 years of dependence added to 52 years of independence, thereby producing a result of 100 years? That we should restore July 4, 1946 as our independence date is in reality the only decent step we should take under the circumstances. There is no other way. We cannot just tolerate something that is so wrong. We have to do something about it. Since it was the Executive Department of our government that initiated this blunder, we expect the same department to take corrective measures.

There are, to be sure, other areas in the Executive Department that need to be improved or changed. But, as has already been noted in the previous chapters, this book is merely presenting what may be appropriately termed as “talking points”.

In short, this book does not in any way suggest that it covers all that needs to be improved and changed in our country. Nor does it claim to be absolutely right. Instead, this book is merely an attempt to light one candle—instead of cursing the darkness—in the hope that it shall burst into the brightness of a thousand stars.

CHAPTER 7

LEGISLATIVE REFORMS

“An individual who breaks a law that conscience tells him is unjust, and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice, is in reality expressing the highest respect for the law.”—Martin Luther King, Why We Can’t Wait, 1964

Congress, as we know it, shall be replaced with a new legislative branch—either bicameral or unicameral—that saves the unnecessary expenditure of the national income and, at the same time, effectively represents the people. The present Congress is one of the most obsolete and unnecessary parts of our government. In modern times, it does not serve any useful purpose.

The present Congress shall be replaced with another legislative machinery which is composed of representatives who are closer to and—at the same time—truly representing the people.

1. HOUSE OF MAYORS. The present House of Representatives shall be replaced with the House of Mayors, chosen from among all mayors in the Philippines, who shall meet as often as possible to assume the role of the Lower House. During their absence, Vice Mayors shall serve as Municipal Mayors.

This new lower house shall be maintained at the expense of the municipalities. Hence, the amount currently allocated for the Lower House can be used for other useful governmental projects for the poor.

Through this method, the new Lower House will be closer to—and more accessible by—the masses.

2. HOUSE OF GOVERNORS. The present Senate shall be replaced by the House of Governors, composed of all the Governors in the Philippines.

This approach can save government expenses, and make our laws more reflective of the sentiments of the people because, by the very nature of their relationship with the people, the governors are closer to the people than Senators who are elected at large.

This new lawmaking body shall be maintained at the expense of the provinces. Consequently, the budget currently earmarked for the present Congress can be used for technological developments.

To make the new legislative machinery more accessible to the people, there should be one legislative building in Mindanao; one in the Visayas; and one in Luzon. The House of Mayors and House of Governors, should spend equal time in each of these legislative locations.

3. THE PHILIPPINE STUDENTRY AND OTHER IMPORTANT SECTORS OF THE COUNTRY, INCLUDING DISSIDENT ORGANIZATIONS.

As has been discussed earlier, there is a need for the students to be actively involved with legislative proceedings and processes.

In the event the people decide to establish the “Federal Republic of the Philippines”, each province [or region] could also have a bicameral legislature. The Lower House may be composed of all barrio captains, while the Upper House may be composed of all city or town mayors.

In the meantime and pending the complete revision or amendment of the fundamental charter, there is an urgent need to change the structure of the upper house of the legislative branch. To give our people equal representation, especially the Mindanaoans, each province shall be entitled to at least one senator and, as such, senators shall, therefore, be elected on the provincial level.

CHAPTER 8

JUDICIAL AND PENOLOGICAL REFORMS

“Freedom is invisible, and when one man is enslaved, all are not free.—J. F. Kennedy, 1963

JUDICIAL REFORMS. To discourage bribery and ensure impartiality, there is a need to establish a modified jury system. The members of the jury, however, must at least be degree holders, preferably members of the Integrated Bar of the Philippines.

PENAL REFORMS. All penal institutions shall be closed. In their places shall be established modern REHABILITATION CENTERS designed to rehabilitate, cure, or counsel or educate “criminals”, instead of punishing them.

Our present penological system is wrong. It derives its moral and spiritual authority from the Western penological system which is, in turn, based on the Judeo-Christian tradition or belief in punishing the sinners or criminals instead of helping them

But imprisonment—or even capital punishment—may be effective only for those who love freedom of movement or who find beauty in life. To a person who loves confinement, the prison cell is paradise and, nay, heaven. And to those who love to commit suicide or who want to die, capital punishment is a blessing or a reward.

For, indeed, as far as the homeless are concerned, who does not like free board and lodging? Who does not like free food? Who does not like free medicine? And who does not like armed guards providing or giving security? All the privileges—which are not available even to the many who are not in prison—are found in our penal institutions.

To some prisoners, life in prison is far better than life in freedom. And some prisoners literally prefer to stay in prison rather than be set free. Thus, in a word, there is a class of people to whom our obsolete concept of punishment does not apply.

On the other hand, and from the standpoint of common sense, it has been said that the Judeo-Christian “a tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye” policy does not really work. If at all, it can make the whole world toothless and blind.

The Judeo-Christian “God” once killed all the people in the world. He drowned them all—except Noah and his family—because they were sinners. The same “God” killed all the people in Sodom and Gomorrah, save one chosen family. Again, these mass exterminations of lives were inflicted as punishment against the sinners, although those who were innocent were also punished without apparent valid justification. But, despite what the Bible says, there are still sinners and “criminals” in every society.

[H: Bite on that myth just presented and you miss the whole point of your relationship with God and “living”. It just did NOT happen as presented, readers—GOD IS CREATOR AND NOT DESTROYER.]

Meritocracy takes the position that there are no “criminals” in this world except, perhaps, those violating special laws. There are only physically sick people. Or mentally sick people. And we should not punish people for being either physically sick or mentally sick.

The people who are presently known as “criminals” are actually mentally sick. They need psychologists and psychiatrists. They do not need sadistic prison administrators and guards to make their lives even more miserable.

If we punish them because they are mentally sick, they will become worse after receiving the punishment. Instead, we must rehabilitate them.

To achieve this result, we must transform one of the major islands in the Philippines as a center for rehabilitation. All “criminals” must be placed on this island. And all steps should be taken to make sure that they stay on this island, and treat their mental illness on that island.

It goes without saying that capital punishment should be abolished. A man begins to die from the moment of his birth. It is inhuman to sentence him to die for the second time only because he is mentally sick.

In this center for rehabilitation, all “criminals” must be trained to work. A murderer, for instance, should be asked to farm or engage in a money-making vocation for the rest of his life so that his earning can be shared by the family of the person he killed.

For those who are incorrigible, stern measures shall be taken to effectively prevent them from committing further abnormal activities.

On the other hand, those who can be rehabilitated shall be allowed to return and join the mainstream of society.

In the United States, for instance, there are more young Black people in jail than in college. They are being punished for being mentally sick. And those who are allowed to rejoin the mainstream of society are most likely to commit the same crimes—or even worse than those they committed prior to their incarceration.

The new Meritocratic system shall refrain from inflicting penalties upon those who are “mentally” sick. Rather, it must consider every person important and resort to all modern medical and technological means to rehabilitate every person who violates the law.

[END OF QUOTING AND PART 7]

We need to leave this now but I would like to say that in a lot of what is presented, I do not agree. I don’t wish to take up my own disagreements at this point, for it is not my book in point, nor my recommended remedies.

Much of the problem would be solved if the judicial system is placed into order and JUSTICE would be instituted—for all, including especially, the Elite criminals.

You have turned into a global society wherein people have to fear for their lives because of the criminals IN CHARGE OF EVERYTHING. Solutions to these problems reach far beyond these measures and yet can be brought into solution in far more simple ways.

We must get rid of corruption and the ability of one to puppetize another just because they have gained wealth and power through unlawful means and force.

Thank you, GCH

A PERSPECTIVE

RE: FEDERAL RAIDS, NEW GAIA, DIANE, EKKER, CORPORATIONS, "WHO DONE IT?"

ARE THE PARENTS, AFTER ALL,
AS STRONG AS THE CHILDREN?

Just when I think I can't walk another step where so many suffer because of attempts to get to ME, I find that strength flows through the very children that we, as parents, feel responsible for defending.

Yes, we do know who directed the raids and legal antics—and it becomes too obvious to be even denied by the Federal lawyers with whom our attorney and Diane were called to "confer".

It became totally clear that Rick Martin is a major player and did, in fact, present affidavits, under "his own" oath, accusations which—let us see what you readers might think. We note the raids were only supposed to be regarding New Gaia and its products. HOWEVER: A part of the warrant read from the affidavit: "I [note the personal-eyewitness representation] know that computers are commonly used by individuals and businesses and may be used by New Gaia Products or the Ekkers to facilitate buying, selling, and recording sales of drugs, updating customer files, and as instrumentalities of criminal offenses." (Pg. 19). LOOK AT THE WORDING—this is a typical trick of Rick Martin and Ray Bilger who believe themselves to be expert legal minds. But interestingly enough, EVERY one of the adversarial SPECTRUM troops had full access to all computers, all property, all offices and even Ekkers' dwelling—every hour of every day.

But what would YOU offhand think if you received this affidavit with the above statement—if you were a Federal Agency?

The Feds then did a terrifying tactic against Diane, who is only the local manager of a small business distributor of health products. New Gaia was established by Cort Christie [of NCH] as a corporation and Cort is likely still showing as the incorporator—and later, agent/agency for same. The corporation's Board of Directors was established, with: Dr. Sandy Tulanian and her husband, who were in control of product, catalogs, etc., Kathy Ward-Campbell (registered herbologist with a Ph.D.), her husband, David Campbell, Brent Moorhead and wife Theresa (also studying as an herbologist), and Rick Martin who was to locate and interplay with product producers. Diane and Jack Kunick were also members of the Board. It is unknown to me who were officers, as in Secretary, President, etc. I might well have missed a few involved parties because neither I nor E.J. were ANY PART OF NEW GAIA IN ANY WAY WHATSOEVER.

When it was seen that no further funds could be sucked from New Gaia to continue paying for the salaries and costs of CONTACT, the misery hit the fan, records immediately disappeared and the international Internet was used by Dr. Young and Rick Martin to scatter the misinformation on their individual Websites where they had, without permission, been running several through which even BANNED-BY-THE-COURT journals were made available along with all papers of which Ed Young had total control, and all of the Phoenix Journals.

Then the "Watchers" took a recipe for "Gaiandriana" from Rick Martin, so advertised, as to how to make it "for people in Appalachia and Afghanistan..." who supposedly deserved the product but couldn't afford it. It was so atrocious that CONTACT had to run a Public Notice to denounce Rick's recipe. Only Rick and Young continually tampered with the product to suit their personalized needs. Fine, for Dr. Young is a scientist holding Ph.D. degrees from such as Stanford. Everything was sent through Dr. Young for attention and approval.

Next, somewhere along the way, the colloids, we are informed, needed an addition to the labels which would read "food supplement" but the Distributor (identified as Diane Kunick) was pinpointed as a deliberate breaker of the law by not adding such a sticker—BUT, an agent of the State FDA had already been sent forth to investigate and no mention was made of same except for some very minor requirements which were immediately rectified and other suggestions attended.

It is NOT the missing files which CONCERN us as to incrimination of any kind whatsoever—it is that the missing files PROVE no such efforts were ever made to cover or hide anything—PERIOD.

Frankly, readers, from time to time I simply want to lay down this job in consideration of the liars, cheats, thieves and those who proclaim their friendship but will literally slay you for whatever reasons, OR PAYMENTS, they get for such dealings. WHO SUPPORTS RICK MARTIN & FAMILY NOW?

IS THIS WORLD WORTH THE EFFORT? YES, I SUPPOSE GOD MUST THINK SO AND JUDGEMENT IS NOT MINE—MINE IS TO SERVE AS WELL AND AS MUCH AS I POSSIBLY CAN. E.J. runs the gauntlet EVERY day in a place where murder is as common as kidnapping—and scams and cons are as prevalent as the rainstorms.

Why don't we "just quit" and toss in the towel to the "traitors" of the world citizens and the "betrayors" of, yes, indeed, the very TRUTH of God? Because there are those who have supported, shared the struggle at their own loss and costs and continue to do so every hour of every day. We will NOT do unto others that which has been so deliberately done unto us and we shall, yes, have to leave justice in the hands of God—for we simply have no time to attend such things as revenge, judgments and certainly not more and more legal fiascoes.

We are watching a Philippine Senate dealing with a trial to impeach the President of the Philippines. It is a circus and also a comedy circus. But, people who would testify against certain parties—ARE MISSING AND PRESUMED DEAD. Every witness who can tell the truth has to be housed under guard in "safehouses" just to stay alive. And no, this is not "hearsay", for we know some of these people. We live in a little world of tapped phones, television and camera surveillance and frequently get warnings from the very intelligence persons to "stay put", "keep your head below window level" and, yes, bombs have been detonated within the block of where we stay. IS THIS EFFORT TO SERVE GOD WORTH IT? Well, I guess we must think so or we wouldn't be here—BUT WHERE WOULD WE BE? We have no home as it sits vacated and deteriorated to the point of who would want to live there? All the things of value are GONE, even the birds are lost to us. Can simply doing God's work be worth it? Well, on this old terra firma, perhaps not—BUT it doesn't take much to see that unless SOMEONE does SOMETHING, it is down the drain—literally. So we will keep making an effort even though, yes, indeed, we have lost family members, family members have been deliberately shot at and now the assault upon Diane, our daughter, whom Rick Martin has always hated (yes, that is the proper word) since onset when we were first supporting Rick Martin 100%—and I mean food and lodging.

I am, I guess, supposed to be impressed with "Bloodsucking Vampire" tales of the house of Windsor as presented by David Icke, whom we know and liked very much. But this author of these "tales of the crypt", Arizona Wilder, actually says she was the "officiator" of actual murders committed by that House of Windsor. I will share recent literature on that topic. Rick was very pleased to track down David and then run that garbage in SPECTRUM as sensational current revelation. But since when is it OK to officiate at Satanic murders but it is worth 2-5 years for leaving off a label on a colloid bottle? Something stinks here, friends. I find this heartbreaking, not sensational. I will share an article sent this week from "Two-by" and see what YOU think about "sensationalism". This is fine for David, for I do believe he believes this trashing representation—but when those such as Ray Bilger who also claims, while lying about even the events which actually took place in his story, that his wife is a "sex-slave" on a higher level than Cathy O'Brien and could even name more prominent "lovers" than actual "slaves", it becomes difficult for ME who has to live in the "real world", to swallow such revelations where someone admits to MURDER and is sent forth to spread the word while expecting to be recalled by the Satanic group "to further participate...". IS THERE SOMETHING WRONG WITH THIS PICTURE, READERS?

As I was pondering this night before last, instead of sleeping, I couldn't find many things worthy of continuing when hurt was being dumped on innocent people as the "self-proclaimed" enemy, Rick Martin tries to "get" us.

But then, E.J. went to the e-mail center and among the distractions of arguments to and against others, a flower fell out of the messages—to "Mom and E.J." and said more than I could ever pray to have in response to the "hell" being experienced by her, Jack and the grandbabies.

So I read, very carefully, Diane's message and it means so much to me that I ask to share it here—for I don't think I hold any greater treasure than this message which was first directed to someone else who has been a major support as to incorporation matters.

[QUOTING:]

"Hello... I have had calls from several people for support and I have been in my lesser of confidences. I would think that it is important for our people to think that there is strength and courage in GOD. This may be the only night that I feel so confident.... I intend to print a copy for myself in 36 font and plastering it to my steering wheel, make-up mirror and toilet seat for the times that I am feeling, well, less than wonderful. It should become my Mantra and I will try to remember that they came from my own head and fingers. ... We will persevere possessing the position of a martyr.

From dictionary: Mar-tyr (n):

1. One who chooses to suffer death rather than renounce religious principles.

2. One who makes great sacrifices or suffers much in order to further a belief, cause, or principle.

'Let me not be the Martyr who seeks sympathy but the Martyr who seeks truth for my principles, causes and beliefs'

Then, when I read what Diane had written to "XX" I knew that my quitting would be out of the question.

The further this goes the madder I get. I have a friend being accused of embezzlement (stealing $ from the place she worked). I look at her scenario and I see it is just a huge joke and she has nothing to worry about. I have spent several days trying to convince her that it is a crock of doggie-do. I finally realized this very evening that my case is actually no different. Someone has an idea that they can acquire what they want by harassing someone else and we are supposed to lie down and take the beatings. Well tonight I told my friend that the Mighty Willow will bend with the wind and the wind is truth and can waver slightly in perception but the Mighty Oak, who may not be truth, and stands in total rigidity will break at the slightest pressure. Well I decided that indeed I will be and am the Willow and even though my truth may have wavers, it is truth nonetheless and my branches will bend but with the "WILL OF GOD" they will not break! The branches of the non-truthers (Oaks?) will be the ones who will break and take the severest blows. I am getting all of the water that my Willow needs through support from family and friends to withstand the torrents of the storms that I know will pass and show greener grass in its path. When we have the greenest pastures in the land we will look from our hill-top and know that it has been by the will and grace of GOD that we have what we have and we will then share in the glory of HIS GRACE with the people that have chosen to stay the course and endure the sharpest of times to mow the mighty lawns.

I sometimes get very spiritual and I only pray that I can hold the same confidence at all times. I know where the truth is but I also fall prey to Satan's threats. When my children and family are threatened it seems to be much easier and safer to give Satan half the lie instead of thinking I could lose by giving all of the truth. Again by the grace of GOD I will bear nothing but truth and bear nothing but greener harvest.

[END OF QUOTING].

I am caused to really think a bit harder on this topic as it nears noontime and our own life-events call us to attention. In the course of the morning, however, E.J. received a call from a member of parliament of Papua New Guinea asking for an appointment "in March" as he returns from a major "mining"-business conference in Canada.

We also are awaiting other things unfolding in Malaysia, for they have almost finished their "in-depth" investigations of GAIA which will also include, undoubtedly, our personal reputation now built in the Philippines. They have, since the Internet lies were noted first as appearing in Malaysia (from Ed Young and Rick Martin through their Internet sites, etc.), already investigated us more thoroughly than even the CIA, FBI and other surveillance bureaus.

The rest of the U.S. Government, it might be assumed, has done likewise and it will be a rather "hardwood-brittle day" for these who have brought the false charges against us and the VERY HIGHER BEING WE SERVE—I BELIEVE HE IS CALLED "GOD, ATON, ALLAH...".

They will find that everything we have offered is both recorded, recognized from the Treasury "down" and that we are NOT "ripping off" anyone, including the U.S. Treasury. And, Diane, perhaps we just became part of the "Willow Tree" family and if we are but "Willow 'suckers'" as in the old Olive Tree orchard, we will have acted always in honor, integrity and Truth. If that means we must be martyrs, let it be known that I have no intention of "dying" for any such cause as fundings—but I will LIVE to serve as long as I can do so. E.J. is much like the rock upon which Gibraltar is famous—he just keeps right on going—into the storm or out of it. If I must be a "sucker" (which is not a parasite if from its own tree, as opposed to a parasite), then I am and shall remain a "sucker" for truth, honor and integrity. I will TRY to love my enemies—although when they hit so unfairly, it is truly difficult and I shall verily enjoy their reaping their own rewards for the hateful and destructive, and, yes, criminal, deeds thrust off onto those who have served and shared.

I know, Diane, that it is difficult to have literally allowed Gail and daughter to live with you in your home and getting her a job only to be turned on as the serpent turns to feed off his prey. Remember that Rick Martin-Cortright also LIVED with us and we supported him, then them, for years. Hurt? No, I think "disappointment" is a better term to use. Rick, and also Charles, held the world, literally, in their hands as to abundance of the basic variety—and threw it back into GOD'S FACE, not to even mention Russell Herman and others to whom he claimed allegiance. Always remember, as you state today: Satan will do anything to destroy anything and everything good and OF GOD.

I know that we have shared many things which seemed sensational, in CONTACT, through the years and have been the point of attack by the Anti-Defamation League (now in trouble on their own) over presentations by Henry Ford's investigation groups and, of course, the banning of books referring to Dr. Walter Russell, brought about by the University of Science and Philosophy.

Knowing David Icke personally I consider that accusations such as "The Queen of England is a blood-guzzling Devil worshiper" is not exactly the kind of headlines he has wished for in his more recent book. However, when Patrick Bellringer of Dr. Young's Website connection of Four Winds said that "Hatonn said or inferred that Gore had to carry a vial of human blood and periodically had to stop and sip some to keep from shape-shifting," I'm afraid I draw the line. How many lies does it take to make a truth?

My observation about David Icke's information source Arizona Wilder is somewhat, I suppose, personal and brought to my attention by my "boss", suggesting that Satanic murdering is somehow OK if you can claim some kind of "brainwashing" or Ultra training of some sort. This is BS—if Arizona Wilder committed murder, ritual or otherwise, she, in my opinion, should be caused to face the courts of law. But no, the books just get reviews and draw audiences and tape-customers. I guess we are just somehow out of step?

[QUOTING WEEKLY WORLD NEWS, Jan.9, 2001:]

HORRIFYING NEW BOOK CHARGES ... THE QUEEN OF ENGLAND IS A BLOOD-GUZZLING DEVIL WORSHIPER ... AND SO IS HER FAMILY!

By Drake Andrews

LONDON—Members of the British Royal Family are blood-drinking Satanists who regularly participate in black-magic rituals that include the sacrifice of children.

Those are among the shocking revelations by researcher and author DAVID ICKE in his blockbuster book The Biggest Secret.

The ghastly practices are all part of the chilling dark side of the world's best known royal family, and are an integral element of their efforts to build up devastating magical powers used to control millions of people around the world, according to the study.

"There used to be an elite circle who took part in ritual orgies at Buckingham Palace," according to Christine Fitzgerald, a former close British royalty confidante, who is quoted in the devastating report.

And an American woman, ARIZONA WILDER, reportedly admitted she formerly officiated at satanic rituals in Glamis Castle in Scotland, and at Balmoral, the Queen's residence in Scotland.

She said that during the "sacrificial rituals the queen wears a cloak of gold fabric inlaid with rubies and black onyx." The one-time professional soccer player turned investigative journalist wrote:

"The Queen and Charles have their own ritual goblets, inlaid with precious stones..."

Children sacrificed in the bloodcurdling ceremonies at Glamis Castle are almost all under 5 years old, Miss Wilder reported. Children are reportedly choice sacrifices at the obscene rites. But pregnant women—who are often deliberately impregnated by the Satanists themselves—are the most potent offerings of all, according to Icke's sources. During a video-taped interview, Miss Wilder had these things to say about the obscene satanic activities of these members of the Royal Family:

* The Queen Mum—"I have seen her sacrifice people." The Queen Mum—the most popular member of the Royal Family—was reputedly present when two teenage boys were sacrificed.

* Queen Elizabeth—"I have seen her sacrifice people and eat their flesh and drink their blood."

* Prince Charles—"I have seen him sacrifice children. There is a lot of rivalry between them for who gets to eat what part of the body and absorb the victim's last breath and steal their soul."

* Prince Andrew—He was reported observed by the former black magic priestess, participating in the evil rites.

* Prince Philip, the Queen's consort along with the couple's daughter, Princess Anne, were also observed at controversial rituals but were not seen taking active roles in them, the woman is quoted.

[END OF QUOTING]

In the write-up in Spectrum, however, there were/are many well known political and power-people who attend these same kinds of rituals which were experienced by Miss Wilder. Then the book is continued to be pushed by said Spectrum. This is their "business", I suppose, but to continue to claim that the Godly Masters serve THEM is unholy in its very concept, especially through "receivers" who push this stuff but refuse to identify themselves. So be it.

My point is that this kind of thing is not only presented as truth, which it may or may not be—but the perpetrator who tells of her own part in sacrificing these "victims" is protected and literally paid handsomely for the blood and gore while a Mother of young children is threatened with 5 years of prison and the subject of Federal police raids—for distribution of vitamins, minerals, aloe vera and other such "dastardly" products. I'm sorry, readers, but there is really something very wrong with this picture.

Does David Icke really believe this monstrous series of tales? I don't know but I suspect he does or he wouldn't risk his own reputation by such press. Is it true? I don't know but what I do know is that you have a SELF-PROCLAIMED MURDERER with no attention to the fact in any way whatsoever and, in fact, becomes the focus of a money-making project, even utilized by old break-aways, Spectrum, et al.

My thoughts are that we get exactly what we ask for and it seems very sad to me that the very ones who have claimed to wish to change the world into a better and Godly place, continue to focus on this negative circumstance without any effort at all to CHANGE IT. Where are the solutions?

How can I KNOW that Hatonn, Soltec, Sananda, Esu "Jesus", and the Masters DO NOT write for or through Spectrum? Because they offer NO solutions—only more and more "do-nothing" types of nothing. These particular Hosts are known to us and they are doers and solution-oriented beings with a purpose—other than to beg for support of SPECTRUM.

Thank you, Diane, I am proud to be your mother. And, yes, indeed, I am sorry to my soul that you must go through this heartbreaking experience. However, we are finding millions of people who are praying that we do not faint along this way, for they are desperate and somehow, if we fail, they fail—in their own thoughts and hopes. We each have a place, not more important than another—only different.

God's Truth never changes nor does it get blown about by the winds of lies or by the liars, and that shall sustain us all.

Love, The Mother of all Willows.

FOR ISRAELIS, REFUGEE ISSUE IN PEACEMAKING IS POINT OF NO RETURN

By Ellen Knickmeyer, BOSTON GLOBE, 1/6/01

JERUSALEM (AP)—Tsvi Michaeli is doing the math on his fingers: Israel's present population of 5 million Jews and 1 million Israeli Arabs plus 4 million Palestinians who have dreamed for generations of recovering the land they lost to Israel.

But like most Israelis, the 27-year-old Jerusalem hairdresser already knows the numbers by heart, totals in a demographic deadlock that looms as the possible breaking point of any Israeli-Palestinian accord.

"Five million of us, 5 million Arabs," Michaeli says. "You know how this place looks on a globe? It's a point." He stabs the air for emphasis.

"How can this be, and it still be Israel?"

Israelis disagree among themselves on peace proposals. But all seem to agree on the impossibility of the Palestinians' demand that Israel allow the return of millions of Palestinians from decades-old refugee camps in neighboring Arab countries and other sites.

It would be national suicide, even the most peace-minded Israeli politicians contend.

"It's the one issue which no Israeli I know of will compromise over," said Benny Morris, one of a new generation of Israeli historians who have challenged Israel's official version of its founding in 1948.

Israelis have long said the Palestinian exodus was largely spurred by Arab leaders' promises to annihilate Israel and return the refugees to their land.

Palestinians say, instead, that they were chased out by Israeli forces. The two sides disagree on numbers as well. The Israelis say the refugees total less than the United Nations figure of 750,000; the Palestinians say it's more.

According to Morris' research, military attacks or expulsion drove out residents in 228 of the 369 Arab villages then in Israel; another 90 of the communities fled in panic.

Israelis saw keeping the refugees out as a matter of survival.

Some villages were destroyed in fighting, others were razed; the Israelis simply built over others as the years passed. Many homes and villages that Palestinians want to return to no longer exist.

Israel's "Law of Return," meanwhile, became enshrined as a tenet of the new Jewish nation promising any Jew, anywhere, citizenship and a home in Israel.

It is that law which enabled Michaeli's ancestors to immigrate here from Poland and elsewhere. The hairdresser's cubbyhole of a salon stands on a west Jerusalem street lined by graceful arcaded stone villas where well-to-do Arabs lived before 1948.

"It's my land. I'm Jewish, and this is a Jewish state," says 18-year-old Chen Almchios, selling mixed nuts at a three-tier shopping mall built on the site of a destroyed Palestinian village, Malha. "The Bible says, a state is the right of the Jewish people."

Generations later, families displaced from places such as Malha still live in UN-run refugee camps in Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

The Israelis charge that Arab governments would rather maintain the camps as symbols of alleged Israeli persecution than absorb the inhabitants into their own populations. They maintain that the refugees of 1948 are balanced out by some 600,000 Jews who fled to Israel from Arab countries.

Palestinian officials adamantly reject a provision in President Clinton's peace plan that would have them renounce their long-held claim to the refugee families' right of return.

Many Israelis have assumed, and still hope, that in the end the Palestinians would do just that in exchange for Israeli concessions on other issues such as holy sites in Jerusalem.

It's not clear how many Palestinians—many of them now three or four generations removed from their old lives—actually would want to return.

But in the camps, return is seen as a birthright. People speak of a "refugee intefadeh", an uprising, if Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat concedes it.

For his part, Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak has been adamant: "The government under my leadership will not accept any agreement under any situation that will accept the 'right of return' in any shape or form," Barak said last week. Underscoring the point, Israel's Knesset passed the "Securing the Denial of the Right of Return Law" that requires lawmakers' approval for any Palestinian return.

Even those Israelis who acknowledge some blame for the refugee exodus say Israel cannot and should not reverse it, except to make financial restitution and accept limited family reunifications.

"There are many things that are acceptable to us. This is not acceptable to us," said Yael Dayan one of the most dovish Knesset members.

Without the displacement of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians, "there wouldn't have been a Jewish state," Morris said. "Whether it's right or not, if you believe there should have been a Jewish state, then this had to happen."

And now, what would happen if one of those displaced Palestinians were to wander through today's green, quiet Talbieh neighborhood in west Jerusalem, walk up to the site of their old home or garden, and knock?

"I would say 'Come, have a cup of tea, you can see your old house,'" said Tamara Elkoshi, a 55-year-old resident of the area.

"I will be sympathetic: 'What happened to you was a tragedy. But you should know, a tragedy happened to us too. What would you do, if it would happen to you, such a tragedy?'"

[JR: The Knesset was quick to pass the Securing the Denial of the Right of Return Law, so that it would no longer be an issue in future peace talks. When Israel in 1948 agreed to invoke UN Resolutions #181 and #194, she pledged that the Palestinian refugees driven from their lands and farms would be able to return home after the state of Israel was recognized. Can Israeli law now revoke both UN Resolutions #181 and #194 that the Israelis agreed to in order to obtain their statehood? The issue may be settled from the Israelis viewpoint but not from the Palestinian point of view. Israel alone gained their statehood by agreeing to the UN resolution and by confiscating and building on Arab-owned lands. The generations of Palestinians still in refugee camps after 50 years in various Arab countries is the responsibility of Israel, not the U.S., the Arabs or the International community.]

PLAYING GOD

By Daoud Kuttab, Arabic Media Internet Network, 1/4/01

The latest round of peace talks in Washington has done little to dissuade the average Palestinian from continuing his anger and frustration towards the Israeli government and its army for their continued collective punishment.

This week the Israeli government went the farthest it has ever gone in tightening the noose around the Palestinian population.

Side and minor roads, which were being utilized with great difficulty, to transport people from one location to another, have joined the major roads already closed in previous months.

Huge cement blocks and mounds of dirt have been strategically placed all over Palestinian territory, literally creating more than 40 islands in the West Bank.

Gaza, which is itself cut off from the outside world, has now been divided, by the Israeli army, into four areas. Travel between areas is forbidden.

Gaza International Airport and the Rafah crossing point to Egypt have been sealed. And the latest is the closure of the King Hussein bridge, which had been the only remaining exit-and-entry route for many Palestinians.

International law, which will soon be fortified by the International Criminal Court, forbids collective punishment of this kind. It is a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention, which deals specifically with the responsibilities of military powers during periods of prolonged occupation. No reason is given for this collective indignity being heaped on more than three million Palestinians. We are not told whether this is for security purposes or, as many suspect, in the form of punishment and revenge. Neither are we told how long these latest restrictions will last. Will it last a day, a week, a month... no one knows. Considered akin to cattle, Palestinians are expected to adapt their lives to the whims of the all-powerful Israeli army.

The timing of this latest closure is connected to the recent Netanya bombing which has been publicly denounced by the Palestinian leadership. But few believe that such tactics will decrease, or in any way affect, the movements of those intent on carrying out such attacks.

The recall of permits recently issued to those with impeccable security status, and to members of the Palestinian Authority who have been granted VIP cards, will hardly affect individuals who are involved in suicide bombings and other violence.

Of course, the suspicion among Palestinians is that national internment in a large prison is part of the pressure that Israel is attempting to bring to bear on the Palestinian leadership, to force them to accept the "generous" Israeli offer.

Generosity is usually defined as people giving up something they own. It doesn't apply when an occupying power returns part of what it took by force to its original owners.

The U.S. and Israeli offers are extremely vague. The hope is that they can be enough to convince Palestinians to give Prime Minister Ehud Barak the support he needs to win the election; yet without the substance that will ensure the agreement's survival.

Short term interim agreements can afford to be vague, but final-status agreements don't have the luxury.

This week's closures have been the harshest since 1967. No one can remember a time in the past 30 years in which such a tight closure has been implemented. At all times it was still possible to find a side road to travel on. If people were unable to use their own vehicles, they could rent a car in east Jerusalem.

If the road to the Ben-Gurion Airport was closed, the King Hussein bridge was traversable.

If the Gaza-West Bank road was off-limits, Gazans could utilize Gaza Airport. If the airport was closed there were the ground borders with Egypt.

This week all roads have been closed. People are, for the first time, using animals to transport goods. Companies are driving trucks to unloading points and carrying cargo over newly established dirt mounds in order to reload them on other trucks from the Palestinian side.

The latest closure has caused many to repeat the statement that the Palestinian territories have become a huge prison.

A friend of mine described the behavior of the Israelis in theological terms: "The Israelis are playing God with our lives."

[JR: Now why do you suppose this view of the Israelis hasn't been reported in depth by our media? This is what life is like for the Palestinians who live under Israeli occupation. These harsh measures are designed to starve and force the Palestinians out and are but a protracted form of punishment and revenge. Israelis are not playing God with Palestinian lives. They are just practicing at being the Zionists they truly are.]

SYRIA JOINS IRAQ, IRAN AGAINST ISRAEL

By Martin Sieff, VirtualNY, 1/5/01

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Be careful what you wish for. You might get it. For years, if not decades, many U.S. and Israeli foreign-policy columnists regularly lamented that only the "lack of vision"—or courage, or anything you want to imagine—of Syrian President Hafez Assad was preventing Syria taking the "historic opportunity" of making peace with Israel.

Last year, tough old Assad, who had held Syria in an iron grip for a full 30 years, finally died, to be succeeded by his mild-mannered, Western-educated son Bashar, an eye-doctor by profession and an enthusiastic exponent of the economic wonders of the Internet.

Surely, progressive, forward-looking, young Bashar, so many of the Western experts and columnists said, would abandon the repressive, paranoid old ways of his father and lead his country out into a bold new era of engagement with the outside world.

And, indeed, he has.

But not the way they expected.

Bashar has launched a new era of Syrian foreign policy all right, but one that is on a collision course for war, not peace, with Israel; for confrontation, not engagement, with the United States; and for close military cooperation with Saddam Hussein in neighboring Iraq, not rejection of him.

Commercial air links are being resumed between Damascus and Baghdad for the first time in nearly 20 years. Iraq has responded by giving Iran permission to over-fly its territory when sending air shipments of arms and ammunition to the Iran and Syrian-backed Hezbollah (Party of God) Shiite militia in southern Lebanon.

Bashar, Middle East intelligence sources told UPI, played the key role in brokering this agreement.

They also said that Bashar is working hard to achieve a rapprochement between historic enemies Iraq and Iran. Between 1980 and 1988 they fought the bloodiest war in modern Middle East history in which half a million people, at least three-quarters of them Iranians, died.

Bashar has even given the go-ahead for close military cooperation with Iraq. This involves, the sources said, joint planning for a coordinated response in the event of war with Israel.

Iraq has moved one of its few and precious armored divisions in recent weeks to the border with Syria, not to threaten Syria, but to be able to respond quickly in support of Damascus if hostilities erupt between Syria and the Jewish state. Late last year, Syria and Iraq, with no publicity, held joint military maneuvers, the first in their modern history.

The new spirit of cooperation extends to economic affairs as well.

Iraq and Syria hope this month or next to reopen a major oil pipeline from the northern Iraqi oil fields through Syrian territory to the Lebanese Mediterranean port of Tripoli. It has not been used since 1982. Already, Syrian and Iraqi technicians are at work on the pipeline. In fact, Iraqi oil is already being refined in the Syrian city of Baniyas, the Middle East sources said.

Bashar, one of the Middle East intelligence sources said, "has definitely embraced" a radically new concept for Syria. He has clearly approved a new strategic doctrine of cooperation with Iraq, Syria's historic regional rival, as well as with Iran, to create a powerful regional block of Iran, Iraq and Syria opposed to Israel and the United States.

This move is a radical reversal of the cautious policies of Bashar's father for a full 30 years. Hafez Assad fought two fierce wars with Israel within six years. First, he directed Syrian forces in the 1967 Six-Day War, when he was Syria's minister of defense. Then, as president, he launched the 1973 Yom Kippur War, when his tough, massive tank army caught the Israelis by surprise and nearly swept them off the Golan Heights and across the Galilee to the Mediterranean before being held and rolled back.

But after that, Assad followed a policy of more than 25 years of trying to avoid any outright direct conflict with the Israeli Army. Since the 1975 Israeli-Syrian disengagement agreement, not a single Israeli soldier or settler on Golan has been killed by direct Syrian action. In fact, Hafez Assad's greatest enemies were two fellow revolutionary Arab leaders of his own generation, Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat and President Saddam Hussein of neighboring Iraq. Syria and Iraq have always been rivals for the leadership of the Arab world, especially in the Fertile Crescent region they share. But ideological rivalries over the past 40 years have made things far worse. Both Saddam and Hafez Assad claimed to preside over the only true, ideologically pure regime of Baathism, or Arab Socialism.

Hafez Assad always deeply distrusted and feared Saddam. Iraq has almost double Syria's population and vast oil wealth. When the United States mobilized a vast coalition and assembled a huge army of 700,000 men to roll Iraq out of Kuwait in the 1991 Gulf War, Hafez Assad joined them.

Reversing this historic policy carries enormous risks for Bashar Assad. But it has major attractions to him as well.

The main risks are that he could blunder into a major war with Israel and that this time, unlike 1967 and 1973, Syria could be totally smashed. Then Bashar's Baathist regime, dominated by the Assad family's own Alawi religious sect concentrated around the mountainous western Syrian city of Latakia, could be swept from power. Or, by allowing the Iraqi military and security services to operate freely in Syria—a policy that was anathema to his father—Bashar could leave himself vulnerable to being toppled and killed in a coup plot orchestrated by Saddam.

But with all its risks, the policy of strategic alliance with Iraq also has many advantages for Bashar.

It is popular with the hawkish Alawite Baathists who dominate Syria's army and security services. They are filled with frustration at their inability to win a chance for military revenge against Israel, Middle East intelligence source say. And they are strongly supportive of this [new] policy.

Also, having been raised from childhood on the radical, anti-American ideology of Baathism, they want to expel the United States and its allies from the region, not come to terms with them.

A strong anti-U.S. and anti-Israel policy is also popular with Syria's Sunni Muslim majority, especially the radical fundamentalists among them. Hafez Assad slaughtered at least 10,000 of these people—possibly as many as 30,000—along with their families in 1982 when he used tanks and heavy artillery to literally flatten the city of Hama when it was in a state of insurrection, controlled by the Ikhwan, or Muslim Brotherhood.

Now Bashar, like his father before him, must take special pains not to offend Muslim religious leaders, especially radical ones, to avoid reopening that deadly old feud.

Finally, the policy of going radical and lining up with Saddam is also popular with Iran, which now fears the United States far more than it fears Iraq. It is also welcome to Hezbollah.

If Bashar instead had sought peace with Israel and closer ties with the United States, he would have risked being undermined, or even assassinated by Hezbollah and the Iranians.

In many respects, Bashar's policy is a product of weakness, not strength. Hafez Assad was strong enough to keep Saddam at arms length. Bashar is not. Hafez was strong enough to resist calls for a more radical, but risky policy towards Israel from his own generals and security chiefs. The young, inexperienced Bashar cannot afford to alienate them. Hafez could defy Iran on occasion. Bashar does not yet dare to.

For decades, U.S. and Israel analysts complained about Hafez Assad's supposedly baleful influence in the Middle East. Very soon, they may have cause to wish it was still there.

[JR: The information from the "Middle East Intelligence" sources has to be the Israeli Mossad. There are a lot of official spin words in this article, like— Bashar Assad, unlike his father (Hafez) operates from a weak position and not strength. He is putting Syria in a radical position by aligning itself with Iraq (past enemy) and the fearful Iran in an alliance [whose effects] could totally smash Syria in a war against Israel. Because of the U.S. support for Israel, the Arabs have no other choice but to form alliances and make friends of their old enemies. Why assume the Arabs want only to unite to fight a war. How about just to survive and continue the peace process? This show of unity, which includes Egypt, is for the Palestinians in Israel who haven't had a choice for the past 50+ years. These Arab alliances must really make Israel very nervous.]

CLINTON CREATES COUNTERINTELLIGENCE BOARD

By David A. Vise, Washington Post, 1/5/01

President Clinton has signed an order establishing a counterintelligence board that will bring together high-ranking FBI, CIA and Defense Department officials in an effort to devise a more effective strategy to combat spying, senior administration officials said yesterday.

Dubbed "CI-21", which stands for counterintelligence for the 21st Century, the "presidential decision directive" creates a board of directors chaired by FBI Director Louis J. Freeh that is charged with implementing a "pro-active" counterespionage program. The board will hire an executive who will be the federal government's foremost expert on counterintelligence, officials said.

"It is a dramatic change," a senior Clinton administration official said. "It is revolutionary in its focus and perspective."

In addition to Freeh, other members of the board will be the CIA deputy director, the deputy secretary of defense and a representative of the attorney general. The operation will be run out of offices at the CIA.

The presidential directive is significant, senior Clinton administration officials said, because it restructures the counterintelligence community by formalizing information-sharing without regard to borders or federal agencies. It also reflects a heightened focus on economic espionage and other types of spying, rather than solely emphasizing the protection of government secrets.

"We have always looked at spies and tried to figure out who was spying on us and what they were after," a senior administration official said. "Now, we are looking more at what it is we want to protect. We will no longer focus on embassies as the centers of foreign intelligence-gathering activities."

The CI-21 concept was developed in the aftermath of the Wen Ho Lee case and other security lapses that revealed systemic failures in sharing information about spying. While information will be shared and counterespionage strategy coordinated, the CIA will not be permitted to conduct surveillance activities in the United States [finished laughing?!]; its agents will continue to operate abroad.

Former FBI counterterrorism chief Bob Blitzer said CI-21 represents a major improvement. "It is a big change because of the deliberate focus" on counterespionage, Blitzer said. "This new structure will bring everyone together in terms of how to assess what is going on abroad, what is going on here, and what the entire intelligence community needs to do to counter past, present and emerging threats."

The first task of the board of directors will be to produce a study identifying American threats and vulnerabilities. And under CI-21, the National Security Council, composed of Cabinet-level secretaries with responsibility for security issues, also will have a new oversight role in counterintelligence.

[JR: What have the NSA and NSC not done all these years to warrant the creation of yet another agency to oversee the CIA and FBI as well as other "unnamed agencies"? The executive (as he is called) will determine what needs protection in the U.S. and act as a lobbyist (?) to Congress for funding of these agencies? Clinton has added so many new departments during his presidency that it is a wonder there are enough government buildings to accommodate all these new staffers/bureaucrats. No wonder there is always new construction and reconstruction in D.C. Our government has turned into a Godzilla who is ready [sic] to eat us all just to appease its gigantic appetite.]

NATO'S DENIALS OF URANIUM OXIDE CONTAMINATION NOT REALITY

Pravda—RU, 1/6/01

Assertions made by Kenneth Bacon, a Pentagon spokesman, that ammunition containing depleted uranium used by Americans in Bosnia and Kosovo could not cause oncological diseases in NATO servicemen do not conform to reality, says Major General Boris Alekseyev, chief of the environmental unit at Russia's Defence Ministry.

In his words, ammunition containing depleted-uranium cores, enhancing its armour-piercing power, were first applied by the anti-Iraqi coalition in 1991 during the Gulf War. 320 tons of shots containing depleted uranium were then used against Iraqi tanks and pillboxes.

The incidence of cancerous diseases in the locals grew 4.6 times after the Storm in the Desert operation had been over, the major general says.

Servicemen who had used the above weapons started to display heightened fatigue, head and muscle aches, loss of memory, difficulties in breathing

A mysterious disease was then for the first time mentioned—so-called the storm in the desert syndrome—which every 7th U.S. veteran of the Gulf War still suffers from.

Boris Alekseyev reminds that the syndrome caused such repercussions that the U.S. Congress demanded from the Pentagon a report explaining how depleted uranium affected men's health and the environment, RIA Novosti reports. So, the report has been submitted.

The document, in particular, says that "when a target is hit, over 70% of an armour-piercing core made of depleted uranium evaporates, contaminating the area with uranium oxides."

It also says that "if depleted uranium gets into the human body, it may cause chemical or radioactive damage," that is, radiation sickness.

According to Boris Alekseyev, servicemen who have handled such weapons, now undergo special regular medical checks.

In his view, this amounts to acknowledgement by the U.S. army command of a hazardous and lasting effect that depleted uranium has on man.

[JR: The U.S. government and the military operate under the assumption that the lie seems to serve them better than the truth. They protect and dutifully serve all that is wrong in this country.]

GLOBAL ARMS BIZARRE

ABC News, 1/4/01

Through Offset Deals, America Moves Defense Jobs and Technology Abroad

But because of a special kind of arms deal—that the jet's engine manufacturer, Pratt & Whitney, says was unavoidable—part of the aircraft's engines will be machined in Taiwan and then shipped back to the U.S. for assembly, irking U.S. defense workers who might otherwise have done the work.

That special type of deal is called an "offset" deal and it's become an increasingly expensive aspect of selling defense equipment to foreign governments.

The latest government data suggests several billion dollars worth of U.S. defense manufacturing work and technology and thousands of defense-sector jobs annually are traded abroad through the offsets demanded by foreign governments as conditions of arms deals.

Foreign countries “want to do more than just get the hardware from the United States,” says Pat Scott, a spokesperson for the State Department’s Office of Defense Trade Controls, which is responsible for restricting and approving defense offsets. “The trend is the desire to have U.S. technology and the ability to manufacture these items themselves, and to sell them.”

Rebates for High-Tech Weaponry Offset deals are made when foreign countries successfully demand some form of compensation, a non-monetary rebate if you will, for purchasing armaments.

With international competition to win lucrative arms sales around the globe so fierce, the returns regularly surpass 100 percent of the value of the equipment purchased.

An offset arrangement can include sharing part of the manufacturing work of the purchased equipment. It can also involve transfers of American technology, licensed co-production of the American equipment for U.S. troops or for sales to other countries, or other types of technological or economic benefits provided by the U.S. exporter.

The phenomenon has strategic thinkers concerned America is bartering away some of its technological edge. U.S. defense workers are concerned about losing jobs. And small- to medium-sized defense contractors worry about losing sub-contracting work.

Offsets have become such a concern, lately, the government has begun treating them as a priority. A congressionally required presidential commission recently was created to study the problem.

The commission, which met for the first time in December, includes the Secretaries of Defense, State and Labor, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, and the Deputy Secretary of Commerce, as well as the heads of the two biggest defense companies and the largest defense union.

Defense union leaders protested when Pratt & Whitney last January announced it would move jobs from Connecticut facilities to other countries to fulfill offset obligations with various countries.

But America’s big defense contractors say they have little choice but to offer substantial offsets. Without them, they say, the U.S. would lose out on major arms deals. And with the U.S. government buying fewer arms since the Gulf War, they say, foreign sales are needed to keep their companies healthy and their work force employed...

Foreign arms sales secured through offsets currently account for about one third of current U.S. defense production, he says. “From the [prime contractors’] perspective, if they weren’t winning that one-third sales, the production base would be one-third smaller.”

The drawbacks of winning new deals with offsets, however, are also significant. U.S. defense companies trade away billions of dollars worth of U.S. manufacturing technology and work sometimes performed by smaller U.S. sub-contractors.

Over a recent six-year period (1993-98), U.S. arms manufacturers concluded $38.5 billion in new arms deals—but they agreed to return $21 billion in offsets, or 55 percent of the value, according to a draft of a Commerce Department study soon to be released.

While offsets help win U.S. companies and defense workers a significant amount of new work, Commerce has estimated that in recent years they have traded an average of 35,000 job-years of work annually. Randy

Barber of the Center for Economic Organizing in Washington, D.C., told the presidential commission an analysis should be done to see if deals made with offsets have actually resulted in a net increase or loss in jobs for American workers.

The State Department reports last year issuing to U.S. companies a record number of 4,000 licenses for offshore defense manufacturing and related agreements.

Exporting that capability also can have national-security implications, says Tom Cardamone, executive director of the Council for a Livable World Education Fund arms control group in Washington, D.C. “It leaks U.S. weapons technology to countries that don’t have it. And that proliferation of weapons technology is an important contributor to the continued militarization around the globe.”

A similar concern was expressed in a recent U.S. intelligence community report forecasting future security threats to the United States. It predicted some U.S. military advantages could diminish “as weapons and militarily relevant technologies are moved rapidly and routinely across national borders in response to increasingly commercial rather than security calculations.”

Surprisingly, the countries demanding some of the highest offset terms are some of America’s closest, most economically stable and technologically advanced allies.

The United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway, and Germany all require offsets averaging more than 100 percent, according to a draft of the upcoming Commerce study. Canada, South Korea, Brazil, and Israel also demand such high offsets.

“The irony is that the more democratic the government, the more likely they are to have an offset program, because their parliamentarians are just like our congressmen, they want jobs for taxpayer revenue,” says Johnson. “When you have a military in charge, they’re less likely to have offsets, because they don’t have to answer to the general public.”

Offsets have become such big business in some countries, laws have been created requiring high offsets and bureaucracies were formed to negotiate and try to enforce the often-secret deals.

Boeing, a civilian and military contractor, recently said it does business with more than 225 U.K. companies, accounts for more than 40,000 U.K. jobs on an annual basis, and is Britain’s third-largest export market, behind only the countries of the United States and Saudi Arabia.

But where economies abroad may be helped by offsets, workers in the country of origin can be hurt.

“At the same time we are transferring valuable technology developed by IAM members and paid for by U.S. taxpayers, we are also downsizing our work force and hence limiting our future ability to produce products for our own defense,” said Thomas Buffenbarger, President of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAMAW), recently. “For U.S. defense workers, this is an especially bitter pill to swallow.”...

The AIA’s Johnson notes that offsets are legal, and have become an essential way for American companies to compete in today’s competitive global arms market. “We don’t have export financing [to reduce prices] like our competitors. We can’t bribe like our competitors, offsets are all we have,” he says....

The one solution that everyone seems to agree on is to negotiate with America’s closest allies to agree to mutual restrictions on the levels of offsets. But because the offset deals are often secret it won’t be easy, says Johnson. “It’s just very hard to control.”...

“I’d be hard-pressed to think of anything forthcoming out of it for the next five or six months.” [JR: Our arms manufacturers don’t seem to have a problem competing overseas even if it means eliminating U.S. jobs and compromising U.S. security. The offset deals that are negotiated trade away our technologies and our manufacturing jobs to foreign countries, some not too friendly or loyal to the U.S. and who will sell our technology to others as Israel has. There seem to be no rules or regulations governing such agreements. Another example is the NAFTA Treaty we signed which openly removes all such restrictions on equipment and technology sales. War and destruction make for huge profits and who wants to stop that? The U.S. sends our troops all over the world claiming to maintain peace, yet is the world’s largest arms dealer and no one has sense enough to stop the arms race... what a paradox!]

HOW THE UN KING HAND-PICKS HIS COURTIER

By Jonathan Steele, The Guardian—UK, 1/6/01

Kofi Annan is under pressure to reform the way senior staff are appointed

It was over lunch in a top-class Paris restaurant that Kofi Annan, the UN secretary general, unexpectedly popped the question to his guest Ruud Lubbers, a professor of globalisation at Tilburg University in the Netherlands, and that country’s prime minister for 12 years until 1994.

Would Mr. Lubbers like to head the world’s major agency for helping refugees, the UNHCR?

“I was surprised,” Mr. Lubbers told a small group of top staff at the UNHCR’s headquarters in Geneva recently. “I knew very little about the issue. I had not applied for the job.” But surprises had been part of his career, he added.

If he was amazed by the job offer, the Netherlands’ Labour government was furious. It had nominated Jan Pronk, the minister for international development, for the UNHCR post. Wim Kok, the prime minister put out a terse statement “regretting” the decision to bypass Mr. Pronk but added, patriotically, that he was glad “an able, experienced and former prime minister, and another Dutchman was chosen”.

The episode perfectly summed up the two problems with top UN appointments. Rich Western governments feel they own the top jobs in the big money-spending programmes, rotating them among themselves. The secretary general, who makes the appointments, is not required to have a short-list, let alone advertise the job or give the initial screening to a selection panel.

Many former senior staff at the UN criticise the system, but nothing has been done to change it, despite lip service to reforming the UN.

“I’m not sure the secretary general should start from the position that Ruritania should get a particular post,” says Sir Marrack Goulding, who served as under-secretary general for political affairs until 1997. “We need to have a much more transparent set of procedures for doing this.”

“What is unacceptable, and it happens all the time, is that governments put pressure on the secretary general to appoint the person they want. This is unfair on the secretary general,” he adds....

In the UNHCR case, according to a former diplomat who represented his country on the UN security council, the Dutch probably felt they had a right to a top job

“because they are a loyal and energetic member of the UN which pays a lot into the budget and haven’t had a Dutchman at a senior level for a number of years”....

Another controversial recent appointment, that of Kenzo Oshima to head the Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), was done on Mr. Annan’s own initiative.

According to a senior UN insider, the secretary general is dissatisfied with the work of a particular Japanese senior official in another post in the UN and wishes to remove him. To keep Tokyo happy, (it is, after all, another major UN donor), he asked the Japanese government to nominate someone to head OCHA. When Tokyo picked Mr. Oshima, who runs the department of international peace co-operation in the Japanese prime minister’s office, Mr. Annan appointed him.

Under the UN charter, jobs are required to reflect an equitable geographical distribution that would befit a world body.

For the roughly 1,800 jobs in the secretariat in New York, a country’s economic weight, as reflected in its budget dues to the UN, plays a role. Britain had 56 of these 1,800 jobs in New York, or 3%, according to figures from the mid-1990s.

When the figures are broken down for the senior jobs—those at department-head level and above—Britain had 10 out of 210, or 5%, corresponding exactly to its contribution to the overall budget.

The picture changes radically when it comes to the under-secretary general level and the heads of the main funds and programmes, such as the UNHCR, the UN Children’s Fund, the World Food Programme, the UN Development Programme and the UN Population Fund.

These are mainly staffed by people from the wealthiest countries, with the United States disproportionately represented.

Given that Washington has for years refused to pay its dues in full, this discrepancy has caused major resentment. These appointments are all made by the secretary general.

The “agencies” of the United Nations—the International Labour Organisation, the World Health Organisation, the World Bank and the IMF—have separate systems of staffing and paying the top jobs, over which Mr. Annan has no control.

The UN secretariat’s salaries are said by the UN to be around half those of the European Union, NATO and the World Bank.

Some governments are believed to top up the pay of their nationals who have top UN jobs, although this is against UN rules.

Britain has been making low-key calls for reform since the Labour government gained office. “We must have a UN whose staff and leadership represent all the countries of the world, but they must be recruited and promoted on the basis of their ability to do the job, not their nationality or political connections,” Clare Short, the secretary of state for international development, told a New York audience in October 1999....

“This could include a definition of the competencies for the post, selection and search committees,” the paper said, “and a clear process for taking the final decision, in which competence would be put above considerations of nationality.”

REPORT: CHINA LEADERS FEARED ARREST

By Robin McDowell, Washington Post, 1/6/00

NEW YORK (AP)—The late Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping ordered the violent 1989 Tiananmen Square crackdown out of fear that demonstrators could topple the Communist regime, documents reportedly brought out of China by a disaffected civil servant say.

The documents reveal deep-seated paranoia that the protests were controlled by unknown anti-communist conspirators. They also expose anxiety by the party’s top leaders that the more than 1 million demonstrators gathered at Tiananmen Square could demand their arrest.

The documents detail conversations among Deng and other Communist leaders. They are said to be based on never-before-published minutes of secret high-level meetings, Chinese intelligence reports and records of Deng’s private phone calls.

The documents were provided by an unnamed civil servant who describes himself as a Communist Party member sympathetic to reformers. They appear in The Tiananmen Papers: The Chinese Leadership’s Decision to Use Force Against Their Own People.

The book, published by Public Affairs, was released in the United States this weekend.

“After thinking long and hard about this, I’ve concluded that we should bring in the People’s Liberation Army (PLA) and declare martial law in Beijing,” Deng was quoted as saying at a meeting held at the Party Central Office on May 18, 1989.

The documents say Deng was encouraged by several members of his inner circle.

“These people are really asking for it,” said Wang Zhen, one of the eight senior revolutionaries who then constituted the ultimate authority in China. “They should be nabbed as soon as they pop out again. Give ’em no mercy.”

Two weeks later, troops using live ammunition moved in on the demonstrators, ending seven weeks of pro-democracy protests in Beijing. Hundreds were killed on June 4, 1989 and thousands arrested in a nationwide crackdown.

Among other things, the papers appear to verify what many China scholars have long suspected: that hard-liners within the Communist Party urged Deng to use force to suppress students while reformers called for a more democratic solution.

The book is excerpted in the January/February edition of [CFR’s] Foreign Affairs magazine, and CBS’ 60 Minutes posted portions of an interview with the civil servant, who uses the pseudonym Zhang Liang, on its Website Friday.

Zhang now resides outside of China. He said he did not use his real name because he intends one day to return to Beijing....

Phone calls to Communist Party leaders and offices seeking comment were not returned Saturday. And given the secretive and closed nature of the Chinese regime, those involved in the project said absolute judgment on the authenticity of the documents was not possible.

But if genuine, the documents offer a rare glimpse into the motivations and fears behind the communist leadership’s decision to order the troops into Tiananmen Square, one of the most tragic and defining moments of recent Chinese history.

Nathan and Link, both well-known China experts, told The Associated Press the documents are consistent with the smattering of information already available outside China and with the testimonies of other former officials who have since fled.

The two professors also spent hours interviewing the former civil servant. They say he painstakingly transcribed original records from files in Beijing and elsewhere onto computer disks, which he brought with him out of China.

The 489-page book only contains brief excerpts from the disks, which, if printed out, would total about 15,000 pages in English.

Orville Schell, dean of the journalism school at the University of California-Berkeley and author of several books on China, worked with Nathan and Link. He said he was skeptical about the authenticity of the documents at first.

“Everyone involved in this project went on an odyssey from skepticism to belief that these were genuine,” he said. “The most important thing was to be able to talk with the compiler.”

He said the author’s extensive knowledge of inner workings of Chinese government and the clarity of his motive in releasing documents—helping reformers now jockeying for position in Beijing—helped convince him that the work was legitimate.

The editor of Foreign Affairs agreed, saying the decision to publish excerpts from the book was made only after extensive meetings with Nathan, Link and the compiler that convinced him the documents were credible.

According to the documents, Li Peng, then China’s premier, warned Deng on May 17, 1989 that protesters shouting anti-party and anti-socialist slogans were calling for the government to step down.

“The spear is now pointed directly at you and the others of the elder generation of proletarian revolutionaries,” he said.

Two days after the violent crackdown, Deng reportedly defended the decision in a Central Politburo Standing Committee meeting.

“If we hadn’t been firm with these counterrevolutionary riots—if we hadn’t come down hard—who knows what might have happened? The PLA has suffered a great deal; we owe them a lot, we really do.”

“If the plots of the people who were pushing the riots had gotten anywhere, we’d have had civil war,” he said.

In another meeting of the Party Central Office, Deng reportedly said: “A tiny minority is exploiting the students; they want to confuse the people and throw the country into chaos. This is a well-planned plot whose real aim is to reject the Chinese Communist Party.”

Nathan said the documents showed just how deep the divisions were within the party. General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, the Communist Party’s top official at the time, was shown to consistently favor dialogue with the demonstrators.

“One thing we learn is that the split within the top leadership on how to deal with student movement was very, very intense,” said Nathan, who was sought out by the civil servant to help compile the notes into a book. It is a rift, he said, that still exists today.

The records reveal that two of the five members of the Politburo Standing Committee voted against martial law. A third abstained from a vote. That caused a deadlock, which, according to the Tiananmen papers, obligated the standing committee to refer the matter to Deng and the other senior revolutionaries.

Among the topics during debates on the issue was the future of China’s leadership. It was then that China’s current president, Jiang Zemin, emerged as the successor for Deng, the documents show.

“One thing I learned from the materials was the top leadership was more frightened than we realized,” said Link, who also witnessed the 1989 protests and crackdown. “They were genuinely afraid of house arrest.”

After the crackdown, battling Chinese leaders decided to purge dissenters from the country’s leadership, the documents indicate.

“We should mete out the necessary punishments, in varying degrees, to the ambitious handful who were trying to subvert the People’s Republic,” Deng was quoted as saying. “Activities that break the law must be suppressed. We can’t just allow people to demonstrate whenever they want to.”

China scholars are quick to point out that the timing of the book is no coincidence: With leadership changes scheduled for 2002 and 2003, reform-minded officials within the Communist Party are likely trying to influence the choosing of the next Chinese president....

[JR: Take note: One thing heads of state and rulers fear the most is being found out by the people—that could result in a revolution. They show that fear in the extreme measures they take to control us. How many laws have been passed since Clinton became president to do just that. We know what is wrong in the world and we have the collective power to make it right.]

CHINA CLAIMS TO HAVE SOFTENED STANCE
ON “ONE CHINA” PRINCIPLE

Yahoo News, 1/6/01

BEIJING (AFP)—In an apparent gesture of goodwill, Beijing has agreed to back off slightly from its “One China” principle while discussing the establishment of full direct trade, transport and postal ties with Taiwan.

Chinese Vice Premier Qian Qichen told representatives of Taiwan’s two main opposition parties that the three direct links could be established as an “internal affair within one country”.

“Qian said we might keep clear of political issues in order for the three links to take place via agreements between enterprises, associations and non-state organizations,” Her Jyh-huei, the head of the Kuomintang (KMT) delegation told reporters on Friday. “That’s quite a big breakthrough.”

Other representatives interpreted Qian’s statements as meaning that as long as shipping and airline companies and port and airport officials on both sides of the Strait agreed to transport and trade terms, then the direct links could be opened.

Such statements, if true, appeared to be a softening in Beijing’s previous demand that Taipei must first accept the “One China” principle before talks on the three links could begin.

The mainland’s official English-language China Daily Saturday called Beijing’s new stance a “goodwill gesture” and a “slightly softening” of the mainland position.

Qian said all Chinese ports and airports would welcome the direct links with Taiwan and expressed hopes that Taiwan would soon end 51 years of trade restrictions and at the very least open the ports of Keelung, Taichung and Kaosiung, representatives said.

Qian also stressed that Taiwanese companies hoping to open up direct links with the mainland must accept a 1992 consensus on “One China” that opened the way for high-level talks between Taiwan’s Straits Exchange Foundation (SEF) and the mainland’s Association for Relations Across the Taiwan Straits (ARATS).

Qian did not say what role SEF and ARATS, the main bodies negotiating cross-Strait relations, would play in three links negotiations.

The talks came just three days after Taiwan allowed limited direct trade and transportation links, or “mini-links”, with the mainland.

China has viewed Taiwan as a renegade province since a civil war ended in 1949. Beijing has refused to discuss a reduction in cross-Strait tensions unless Taipei first accepts the “One China” principle which maintains that there is only one China of which Beijing is the sole legal government. [JR: Opening lines of business and trade is one key way for China to draw Taiwan into its “One China” policy without having to go to war. Maybe the government of China is softening its image as well as its policies. Perhaps we are beyond the “Year of the Dragon”.]

FBI SEARCHES JEWISH CENTER FOR EVIDENCE OF TERRORIST FUNDING

ABC News, 1/5/01

NEW YORK (AP)—FBI agents executed the search warrant at the Hatikva Jewish Identity Center with assistance from the New York City Police Department at about 9 a.m., according to the center’s director Michael Guzofsky.

About six hours later, authorities began loading a trailer with the seized items, which included 84 sealed cardboard boxes, 6 computers, a file cabinet, several plastic crates apparently containing file folders and a map of Israel.

William Muller, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney’s office in Brooklyn, said court papers in the case were sealed and would not comment on when they might be opened.

Joseph Valiquette, a spokesman for the FBI’s New York office, confirmed that the agency was executing a federal search warrant at the center, located on Coney Island Avenue in the Parkville section of Brooklyn, but declined further comment.

According to a federal law-enforcement source, investigators are probing whether the organization housed at the center has raised money for terrorist activity.

Rabbi Meir Kahane, who was assassinated in a New York hotel in 1990 at the age of 54, founded an organization that called for the forced expulsion of Arabs from Israel. After his death, Kahane’s son, Binyamin Zeev Kahane, founded an organization known as Kahane Chai, or Kahane Lives, which is outlawed in Israel and listed as a terrorist organization in the United States. The younger Kahane was killed by gunmen on Sunday during an ambush in the West Bank when gunmen opened fire on his family’s car. He was 34.

Guzofsky, 36, said he was inside the center Thursday when agents arrived. He said between 20 and 30 agents conducted the search.

“We stand out here as our most basic civil rights are trampled on in there,” said Guzofsky, who said his group is not affiliated with the outlawed organization founded by the younger Kahane.

Guzofsky said the seizure would primarily turn up videotapes, books and other “ideological paraphernalia” made available at the center.

Guzofsky said he attended a fund-raising dinner last month where Binyamin Kahane was a featured speaker. But he denied that Hatikva center was involved in fund-raising for the younger Kahane’s movement.

Guzofsky questioned the timing of the raid, less than a week after the younger Kahane’s death, and at the same time that “people in Washington are discussing giving away Israel”.

He said he expected the center to reopen immediately. Hatikva means hope, Guzofsky said, “and I think we’re the last hope for Israel.”

[JR: Now the Jewish activist and supporters of Israel know how it feels to be raided and targeted by the Feds. How many American groups or publications have been labeled anti-Semites by the Jewish ADL, tried and found guilty under Talmudic Noahide laws in U.S. courts? Their only so-called “crime” was to either criticize or voice an opinion against Israel and Jewish [Zionist] policies.]

NORWEGIANS REMOVE THE VEIL OF SECRECY AND VIRTUALLY NAME THE KURSK KILLER

Pravda—RU, 1/1/01

Igor Sergeev, Russian defence minister, confirmed today in Brussels the words said by Rear-Admiral Einar Skorgen, former commander of the Norwegian Northern Force.

According to the admiral, Russian anti-submarine aircraft did pursue on August 17th a foreign submarine escaping from the site of the nuclear submarine Kursk’s crash.

Admiral Skorgen also said that Russian North Fleet aircraft got so absorbed in the pursuit that [they] nearly violated the Norwegian air space, so Norwegian fighters made an alert takeoff.

Happily, violation was avoided thanks to a talk between the Norwegian Air Force and the Russian North Fleet commanders.

On top of that, according to the admiral, there was something wrong with the U.S. submarine Memphis entering the Norwegian port of Bergen.

Moreover, wives of 12 Memphis sailors were then urgently flown from the U.S. to Norway, the aim of their arrival being kept secret.

[JR: This incident of the U.S. submarine Memphis makes for a bit of a mystery. Putin has been diplomatically quiet about this but the Russian navy is quite vocal. Both the U.S. and NATO refused an official request by Russian admirals for an exterior inspection of the USS Memphis shortly after the incident. Perhaps the Russians had uncovered other startling evidence that connects the U.S. (and NATO) to the Kursk tragedy—like the railings from a Memphis-class submarine found near the crash site? If so, could this be one of the reasons the U.S. agreed to assist Russia in a joint venture in its revised war with Afghanistan? The official announcement was to get bin Laden and “contain” the Muslim Taliban—that, however, will have to do for now.]

COURT TO PONDER CURRENCY COMPLAINT

The Guardian—UK, 1/7/01

SAN SALVADOR, EL SALVADOR (AP)—The Supreme Court has agreed to consider a complaint that El Salvador’s recent adoption of the U.S. dollar as its currency is unconstitutional, officials said Saturday.

The complaint, filed in December by a private foundation set up to study the constitution, says the legislature didn’t give sufficient notice as it drafted the law adopting the dollar.

A court official, Rene Hernandez Valiente, said Saturday the court had studied the complaint and agreed to consider it. A decision was expected within three months.

Under the new law, Salvadorans began using dollars—along with their traditional currency, the colon—on Monday.

However, the Foundation to Study the Application of Rights alleges that opposition politicians were not given sufficient time to debate the law because legislators drafted it in secret. The law was approved by Congress in November.

On Thursday, the opposition Democratic Center Union Party also asked the Supreme Court to declare the measure unconstitutional, claiming it violates requirements that the country regulate its monetary supply.

The adoption of the dollar is part of a trend in the region. Countries facing chronic inflation and jittery investors hope use of the greenback will stabilize and boost their economies.

Panama—Central America’s richest nation—has long used the dollar, and Ecuador adopted it in September.

Argentina has pegged its own peso to the greenback, while Guatemala plans to adopt the dollar alongside its quetzal on May 1. Much of Cuba’s economy also operates in dollars, though officials say that is a temporary situation.

[JR: History certainly repeats itself. Golly, gee— isn’t this similar to the way our Federal Reserve (a private group of bankers) got the U.S. law passed in a bogus session of Congress to usurp our own currency and legitimize their fiat paper money? Let’s hope Latin America doesn’t get taken in the same way and with the same plan.]

THURS., NOV. 22, 1990 9:11 A.M. YEAR 4 DAY 98

GIVING THANKS [Thanksgiving Day]

FROM DHARMA: On this day of focusing appreciation, I need within to express without my gratitude and humble thanks for being allowed to participate in this unfolding, incredible experience called LIFE! At this time of historical transition, to be allowed to even be present is beyond my expression capabilities—to participate is a gift above all gifts. I express, on behalf of we, the Earth ground-team, our collective recognition of the honor and love bestowed upon us. We come, as do you, in service unto God, fellow-man, nation and Truth—may your will be done, Grandfather, for you have walked with us while we have grappled our way through the veil and into flickering memories of our purpose.

There is nothing we would not do for you in the Light of Truth if you but ask us, for too long have we only asked of you and the brotherhood. May we assume the responsibility of this mission in the glory and truth handed into our care for the sowing of the seeds of truth upon the fertile ground—if you can give unto us such a gift—may we never be found intentionally negligent of the commission.

We ask, and give, our own truth and blessings unto all our relations that we do not, for even one moment, forget their passage is filled with confusion and, as we grow, Grandfather, may we find the path and move some of the pebbles out of the path of our brothers.

Thank you for walking with us, and may we come into understanding, for it is difficult to be human in this day of chaos of which there seems to be no understanding and may we come home soon in fulfillment of that which you have sent us to do. May we ask only for our brother—and then hear that which you give us to do—that his way might be easier and truth come into his being. May your will always be that which we acknowledge and bear action, for in the knowledge of that truth we, too, shall come into the Lighted halls of your lodge and rejoin our family. We are homesick and lonely for our home but may we serve well that our arrival back to our place among the stars shall the bear glory, love and peace which moves always beyond our understanding. May your will be done and may your power reveal itself in each of us that we act, always, in your Truth and Light. May our lodges be always in perfection, within, that you find a place of perfection in which to dwell.

In appreciation unto the councils and the Sacred Circle of Infinity to be allowed to serve, I ask your continued guidance and presence as we journey forth upon this planet in the mission granted unto us. Thank you, Grandfather, for your sheltering wings, for sometimes we are so lonely and the way seems impassable and impossible—may we always be given to persevere and see the way as you would have us walk, within the wondrous Creation. May we represent our brothers of the tribes from the Heavens—and we ask that you of the unseen tribe be in knowledge of our love and service unto you.

I am humbled to be allowed to be your hands, for I have so little else to give and you have given all. Hear us, Grandfather, that we not be a blind voice in the dark, but rather, a knowing example and presence within the Light.

In behalf of my brothers and sisters, I petition you to accept our gratitude—for you have gifted us with ALL there is. May we keep this ever present in our consciousness—AHO!

* * * * *

TODAY’S WATCH

Hatonn present, to walk with you ones within the Light of which you give appreciation. We can only bind as into ONE, the prayer of petition that we might serve together as we walk through this journey home. Salu.

I would not take time this day to speak of many world events, for you are capable of seeing the facade on this day of projected banterings and harangues. I do, however, ask that you follow the trail of the Russian representative on his journey to high level meetings with China! This is, indeed, important. There is much going on behind the sham of turkey dinners and crass facade but allow us to give appreciation for the brotherhood which does come forth on the special days set aside for unity. May the peace and love of your holiday season override the clang of battle and war cries. Every turn into the direction of God is blessed, indeed.

PLEIADES CONNECTION

We have often spoken of your connection with Pleiades and for a while we shall write about these attachments—for your brothers from the stars have great insight which they willingly share with you ones who are still grappling with the dark corners of memory.

Your brothers from Pleiades have witnessed those of you who were and are unable to determine the truth or were frightened when confronted with it; this serves no purpose for terrestrial man nor themselves. The fear should never be present in any manner as all men hold the Truth within themselves and must only know this to find it. A human may deliver himself from all manner of ignorance if he generates the will to seek Truth and then does so.

Wisdom is the Light and wherever the Light flashes upward, there darkness and ignorance disappear. Ignorance is the essential darkness and can only be overcome by the light of wisdom. Further, little brothers, wisdom is the mark of a human who has recognized the existence of Spirit and works with and according to the Creational laws, for wisdom and the Spirit are two factors which react as one, much in the same way as the Sun and light of the Sun. Both give warmth and both give light. Wisdom is the mark of the existence of the Spirit and disguises itself in the qualities of Truth, knowledge, love, beauty, grace, harmony and peace.

You ones of Earth desire to remain bound to passing “time” but you cannot measure “age” by that which you perceive as passing years. The “human” may be very old as witnessed by the exterior perception, but this is only a passing state. A century ago human was not old and a century from this present moment he will not be old—only the physical body can age in any manner what-so-ever, for the Spirit only renews and grows in knowledge and experience. The Spirit remains forever young and is never subjected to the appearance of age, for age is like youth and every other experience, it is only a passing state of being.

YOU WANT TO HOLD IT ALL

You ones of Earth-bound attachments dream and ponder and wonder about your brothers of space. You ponder about whether or not they are “out there” and if so, how can they reach you and how can you reach them—you want ideas you can understand and yet, there is no mysticism regarding these states of actions and being, but only mystery—until the puzzle is accomplished.

You want to know about propulsion systems and physical elements of construction of ships and be reminded of how it is where you came from so that you might be reminded of that which makes you lonely and homesick—you want to remember the “whys” and “hows” and you are impatient to move on and yet you lock yourselves into the cement of that which you have created to shackle you to the physical experience.

I can speak of the general of that which you consider “physical”, for your brothers move about in a most physical manner, for the most part, having learned to overcome the compression of the dimensions as they differ. We of the etheric presence move by the projection of intent through thought—so I shall not go into that deeply at this writing, for we need to speak of your connections with your kindred.

Let us consider propulsion, for the largest number of questions come forth as “How can you travel such distances—how do your craft function?” For travelling through cosmic space, a drive is necessary which surpasses the speed of light by millions of times. But this propulsion can only come into action when the speed of light has already been achieved. From that it follows that a further drive is necessary, regulating normal speed up to that of light. This means that a starcraft, or beamship as referred to by the Pleadians, requires two drive mechanisms, first the normal which accelerates up to the speed of light, and then a second for the hyperdrive, as you might refer to it. A drive then, which generates a million-fold, and even billion-fold, the speed of light, thus producing the hyper-speed by which hyper-space is pierced and penetrated. This is a space in which the mass seems to increase in relationship to the speed attained. So time and space simply collapse, and they become zero time and zero space. This actually means that time and space cease to exist. Thusly, distances of numerous light-years are traversed in a mere fraction of a second—with no lag of time.

The actual “time” required to make a journey, say, from Pleiades to Earth is in the speeding up to light speed and the slowing down again at destination. In thought transference there is no time involved what-so-ever—except the split seconds required for disassembly and reassembly. The actual time of physical transference by craft is less than ten minutes of your calculations for such a distance.

You will not be given statistics of detail as to function because you ones have enough toys beyond your ability to control without bringing them into outer-limits of the cosmos. It is not in the best interest of the cosmic brotherhood that Earth human be given the ability to penetrate the cosmic spaces—you have all you, and we, can handle right on your orb and solar space. To great extent, however, many of the problems have been overcome by some of your Earth scientists—and the Soviets, as you call them, have developed great technology in space flight and solar exploration. The U.S. has done very well, also, but you all utilize the wondrous technology to produce wars and not grow in grace, peace, exploration for knowledge and brotherhood in love. In time, you will be given to solve the problems yourself—when the sequence of growth becomes safe for the universal existence.

Your thrust systems, of course, will work on the basis of light pulses from light-emitting drives. Light-emitting drives work for normal propulsion and move the beamships to nearby planets and a safe distance away from an orb—and then another drive is activated when the distances are great. We could refer to this second drive mechanism as a hyper-propulsion system, which surpasses time and space. It is a bit hard to describe these systems in Earth terms, for your language is different and so are the labels given to such minerals as mercury, which is utilized as well as the various programming crystals necessary for craft apparatus. We refer to things such as “tacheons” which are generated and harnessed in both drive systems with only differing magnitude and attitude.

Pleadians predominantly utilize disc-shaped craft, especially for long-distance travel, because of the aerodynamic qualities. Once in motion, we ride a “boundary layer” much similar to the principle applied to Tesla’s bladeless turbine/pump. The boundary layer, for brief explanation, is the tiny distance, let us say, between the wing of an aircraft and the atmosphere passing across the surface—there is a totally static area untouched by the atmosphere itself to the surface. Once in motion there is nothing that touches the skin surface of the vehicle. The disc-like form, therefore, vouches the least resistance, and also offers the largest surface which rides the energy currents, to enable the drives to be most efficient.

GRAVITY OF GRAVITY

This is a bit easier to discuss and, further, is no longer a secret to Earth scientists. The beamship is completely surrounded by a protection-beam-girdle (excuse me, ladies). This allows every interference to simply glide away, without pushing. The same also occurs in the cosmos, which swarms with particles. Therefore, the beam-protection screen functions to protect the ship against all influences and resistances, with anything contacting the screen becoming pushed aside or disintegrated—as the boundary layer spoken of above. All things which would otherwise penetrate or are resistance-offering are simply diverted without evoking pressures in any manner. Resistance must be eliminated to reach sufficient speeds for distance travel.

Removal of this protecting screen brings into play another very important effect which is of great importance—especially to passengers and crew; the glide-away effect of the beam-protection-screen diverts the gravity and attractive forces, and the beamship in effect becomes a micro-planet which can travel at near lightspeed through any atmosphere without any risk at all.

The gravity of a planet does not influence the beamship; the passengers feel nothing abnormal and there is no force levied against their beings—just as if they were on a home planet where the balance is adjusted by natural selection and where the planetary gravity is in accordance with their anatomical capabilities.

In the beamship itself the gravity, of course, is balanced to the passengers and is completely controlled. When passengers on spacecraft from other worlds move in atmospheres alien to them, or on hostile planets with unbearable gravity and atmosphere, they must utilize controlled-environment coverings, light “aura” shields and transportable instruments and apparatus to measure, maintain and produce protection for the beings.

These things will be, and some already are, developed on your planet but Earth human must develop behavior balance before all technical knowledge is allowed perfection, for as I stated prior—Earth man always utilizes the wondrous inventions and higher scientific knowledges in detrimental ways. As you develop, the menace is ever present of the Earth human exercising his technical knowledge, abilities and inventions for evil intent and power-control motives. This continues to happen over and over again, not only with Earth humans, but with other humanoid beings on other worlds as well. As man develops these techniques which will allow him into the outer cosmos, he will not longer be allowed to continue this behavior without recourse—he will not be allowed to fly from planet to planet intending to capture and control and become victor over another race.

In cosmic space many dangers of many proportions lurk where other cosmic inhabitants are not helplessly exposed to attack by other races. There could follow deadly defeats for the Earth humankind, and complete slavery, which could equal the falling back into the primary existence.

It could also be possible that the planet Earth could be completely destroyed, because there are inhumane and hostile as well as humane races inhabiting planets, etc., in the cosmos as well as humane and advanced races.

When Earth man desires to take his barbarous thirst for power, material possessions and control into the cosmos, then he must count on his complete destruction, and no other creatures from other planets will come to his assistance, for he will be the aggressor and such behavior will not be allowed according to cosmic order.

Earth human must understand that his world is in transition and herein comes the separation and sorting. Some will transcend the accepted dimension but many will be sorted into other placements while the Earth orb heals and renews. As Earth man moves into cosmic space, let it be known that there are other races who will not allow themselves to be under attack, exploited, or forced into servitude, as is usual behavior among the nations of your Earth. They will defend themselves with power, which will remain, for a long time, infinitely superior to all technical means of the Earth human being. Where this is not the case, they may well be under the protection of other and more developed intelligences whose techniques approach perfection.

Peace will be preserved and death and destruction will not come to universal order—and this must be given as information to Earth human, for his spiritual wisdom is still poorly developed, indeed.

Earth man must face himself that he and his forefathers have brought all of mankind and the Earth herself to the brink of ruin and, prior to this current time, has had to evacuate the planet in panic and flight on numerous occasions—to return in a primitive state indeed.

There have been occasions in the cosmos when power-hungry and barbaric characters experienced in your solar system and roamed the spaces with limitless hate and unquenchable thirst for power. In one such instance they destroyed themselves to the last man, and no creature survived the conflict. They destroyed their own planet with a vast explosion which ignited the very atmosphere and nothing remained of that planet save the many thousands of asteroids, which still today circle around your Sun—as memorials to the deadly unreasonability of human creatures to following the laws of God and The Creation as laid down for guidelines. This planet was known by several names, one of which was Maldec, and another, “Malonia”. This is not intended, by the higher brotherhood, to ever again be allowed—the system is still in upheaval after eons of interim sequence. You will end your cycle of experience in different manner, for the chaos is not acceptable.

Your planet must unify—but it must unify in Light under God and in balance and harmony with others of the universe. This New World Order—Global One World Plan is the most destructive of all unifications upon your planet, for it is birthed in evil intent, control, greed and intent to depopulate the planet by any means necessary. Brothers, you have come a long, long way—unfortunately, the journey has been, for the most part, in the wrong direction—away from God and not toward His Presence. The actions have caught up with you and you endure a time of chaos and unbalance which threatens your destruction—may truth and knowledge flow in time to make the necessary changes to return to sanity.

Man must return to spiritual balance and come into love within the highest definition. One cannot clothe love into words, for love is the same as bliss and joy, a state without a place or limit. It neither perishes nor can it be shaped or manipulated into that which it is not.

A spiritually developing person is a noble artist of precious spirit, filled with love, endowed with knowledge, logic and above all, wisdom. His wisdom is an always present Light, shining even into the depths of darkness. It is not as the light of day which can be overcome by the darkness of night—it is ever present and surrounds all.

As man comes into spiritual awareness—that wonders which abound are but the spiritual force exercising perfection—as all too often occurs, the human conceals a wonder behind a mysterious veil because he lacks logical explanation. Something unexplained is always a mystery in consideration—it does not mean that it is “mystical”—ONLY UNEXPLAINED AND NOT YET UNDERSTOOD!

The only thing limiting the progress of the Earth human is the Earth human himself! You are limited by time and space perception and therein you differ greatly—for with the brothers of the cosmos, there is only the immediate—the “now”. So be it.

Let us begin to act in each moment as if it were unlimited and as if space were infinite—for so it is. Whatever the perceptions of the moment, know that it can be changed in the flickering of an eye—if man but chooses to so do. As we journey together into the cosmos, the bindings of the past experience must be left aside and only the positive lessons learned be brought forth in habit and character. To change thine world, there only needs be one changed—YOU! PONDER IT.

May we walk in Grace, together, this day. Come with me, chelas, for I know the way. Salu.

I move to standby, Dharma, that you might join with your family. May there be renewal of intent and direction as we focus on our mission within the Glory of WHAT IS!

God has come forth in perfection and because He IS; so shall we become! Saalomé.

Hatonn, to stand-by. Clearing frequency, please. Thank you for your service this day. Salu.

CHAPTER 3

REC #1 HATONN

FRI., NOV. 23, 1990 8:28 A.M. YEAR 4 DAY 99

Hatonn present to speak; I come in total service unto God, The Creation and unto you, my brothers. May understanding be sharpened that comprehension come quickly and our work accomplished. In the Light shall we stand strong that the darkness may be removed from this wondrous, but weary, land.

DESTINY IN YOUR HANDS

Earth brother, for the present, the destiny of lifestream and the placement of your experience rests with full weight upon your own shoulders. However, should a time arise where an aberration or probable cataclysm comes in imminent, irreversible track that would affect the depths of cosmic space beyond the conscious thoughts of the Earth-human, it shall be that involvement from the advanced brotherhood will be activated.

Those humans present upon your planet who are willing and/or have turned unto God and The Creation Laws, shall be evacuated at such occurrence—for most of you are our “ground crew” and will come rapidly into the remembering thereof. God would never—NEVER—leave His focused children without assistance and instruction.

COMMUNICATION

Over and over you ones ask “WHY?” this or that. Most especially “Why do you speak only through a translator—why not speak directly to us in first person?” Because you are not attuned to “hear”. Ones anger at us for not giving forth the frequency for radio contact of this scribe, for instance. We have no objection to giving forth the frequency and you can tune it in on your wave bands—but what do you expect to hear? Do you expect to hear David Brinkley giving forth with dissertations regarding cosmic and Earth current events?

We send to specific receivers who are placed at most particularly chosen locations—at critically-located crystal formations. There is nothing mystical about the procedure of actual communication, for the patterns are put forth in frequency pulses on specific wave frequencies which are not necessarily closed circuits. But herein the problem arises in such circumstances as is present with scribes—their purpose is to put to print the information as given. We give it in projected format of universal codes (pulsed signals). The receiver receives the signals which are then translated by the individual into language native to the receiver. I would not, for instance, have Dharma, who only converses in English—receive Germanic dialects. Why would we do that when we can utilize a German-speaking native to receive in German language? We broadcast in what you could refer to as vision sequence and code pulses which are instantly translated by the receiver. IF YOU TUNED IN TO THE EXACT FREQUENCY UTILIZED FOR, SAY, DHARMA—YOU WOULD PICK UP HIGH PITCHED (SHRILL), MOST DISAGREEABLE ELECTRONIC TONES WHICH WOULD BE ANNOYING INSTEAD OF INFORMATIVE. THERE WILL ALSO BE WHAT YOU CALL “STATIC” FROM INTERFERENCE WHICH A RECEIVER IS CAPABLE OF DISREGARDING. We do not work in great secrecy or mystical hoopla—it is simply that the receivers are trained to handle the apparatus, so to speak.

The higher energies are, of course, capable of communicating with any and all, but space brothers do not and the receiver must be acceptable to communication. It has nothing to do with capability but everything to do with free-will action and privacy. Pleadians (since this is the race in topic) do not penetrate thoughts unless invited to do so. More of you of Earth request that communication than you might be aware of at your level of consciousness, and even though the use of invisible modes of contact are available for usage, the presumption of interference is forbidden. To do so would be to violate two highly regarded principles: privacy and free will, put as simply as possible. Both are considered most important to the development of an individual or society—and terrestrial man must be allowed to make conscious decisions and then learn to be responsible for that which he creates.

Thought transmission is the purest form of communication, as the conversation may not be manipulated into something it is not! Changes in intent and content are manifest through the translation into languages. This is why—as we move into the realm of need of absolute understanding while reducing error projection through language—this local group of Earth humans sit together and physically read the documents and hear the portions read aloud whereby we can clarify, repunctuate and attend misrepresentations to the best of group contemplation. I personally attend every word and witness whether or not the understanding is penetrating the understanding faculties of the individuals. It makes for very long hours of intense attention—please accept that we are projecting as clearly as allowed and as is possible. Our full intent is to allow total truth, but remember, dear ones, we come in service within fallible species and are restricted to alien language and alien identification of more technical and scientific materials.

For instance, there will be less than one in a million who would even begin to understand projections of mathematical configurations and grid harmonics and, therefore, we do not outlay such material which would simply bore the masses into deeper sleep. How many of you even care to look at the surface and cross-sectional areas of the Earth in terms of nautical miles, or minutes of arc, and consider the values in regard to distance on the surface to see the interesting facts which emerge? Well, let us see! The cross-sectional area is equal to 37127665.09 square nautical miles. The harmonic reciprocal of this number is 26934093.

The surface area is equal to 148510660.36 square nautical miles. Each quarter of the Earth's surface is, therefore, equal to 37127665.09 square nautical miles. The harmonic reciprocal again being 26934093. Now, how many of you simply fell in love with the foregoing? I thought not! We will enclose some of such information, for we will be bringing keys to unlocking information cells for certain ones—but it will mean nothing to the receiver nor to most readers in the general populace. Believe me, chelas, to expect “proof” from cosmic brothers on the basis of technical knowledge or holographic projection simply is unrealistic in suggestion—for it means naught to man unless he is in understanding of that which he is receiving. We are bringing truth unto the masses in these Journals—that means more than 6 billion individuals! Technical information shall come forth in other formats unto ones with understanding—and I assure you the book sales of such volumes is quite limited, indeed.

HARMONY IN THE STARS

I have written some of the information which will be given herein in past Journals but it so pertinent to the subject of Pleiades that I must give it forth again. I shall endeavor to not be boring or repetitious to the point of losing you completely. You must begin to know your historical roots, however.

HERMES: “Listen to your inner selves and look into the infinity of space and time. There reverberate the song of the stars and the harmony of the spheres.

“Each sun is a thought of Creation, each planet a mode of that thought. In order that you may know divine thought, O souls, you painfully descend along the paths of the seven planets and their seven heavens and ascend once again.

“What do the stars do? What do the numbers say? What do the spheres revolve? O souls that are lost and saved, they relate, they sing, they revolve your destinies.”

PLEIADES

Most commonly the Pleiades are today referred to by their ancient Greek name, Pleiades, (Plea' ya dez). These suns carry names from all areas of your history. The Romans called them the “Virgins of Spring”, the Australians labeled them the “Young Girls”, and many civilizations denoted them as the “Falme”, typical of the god Agni, who represented the source of fire, and the Bible refers to them as the “Seven Stars”, or simply as the “Pleiades”. At this time of your cycle (ending November) in the hours near the changing of your day, the Pleiades will be almost directly overhead in perception. The golden radiance “star” perceived just beneath the constellation as seen from Earth sphere—is the Starship Phoenix! Salu!

The Greeks refer to the cluster of stars that have guided people, far removed from each other, in agriculture and commercial affairs simply by rising and setting, as the Seven Sisters. These are honored in the Court of the Cariatids (as pronounced in English) in the stone remains of the Acropolis in Athens. Their brilliance and twinkling communication has been the source of wishful admiration and critical observation on every continent, in every age of man. They have been worshipped by some, celebrated by others, and recognized for their wondrous beauty and sweet influence by almost all. Why? Because they call to you as a whisper from home and homeland!

JOB 38:31: “Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades or loose the bands of Orion?”

AMOS 5:8: “Seek Him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into morning, and maketh day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the Earth: The Lord is His name.”

Pleiades (The Seven Sisters) are located in the constellation of Taurus, the bull. Clearly visible in the Northern Hemisphere on winter nights, they resemble a tiny reproduction of the Little Dipper and are often called such—actually, in Greek, they are often referred to as the “micro-dipper”. These are one of the most carefully studied regions of the firmament. Man of Earth is drawn to them as if to a magnet by iron shavings.

These wondrous orbs have enraptured minds for centuries of your counting and we give honor to your 18th-Century comet hunter, Charles Messier, who was first to chart and identify them. The primitive equipment of the day often allowed amateur astronomers to mistakenly label stationary objects as comets so, to assist his fellow celestial watchers, Messier worked diligently from his observation atop the Hotel de Cluny in Paris, France. In 1771 he published his first catalogue of some forty-five non-cometary objects and it was in this register that the Pleiades were designated the label of M-45. Now for you ones who keep up with such happenings, the alien recently “taken” by your CIA in Virginia, comes from the system designated as M-31. These are simply designations by Earth man to more easily place the heavens into a grid system.

Many astronomers have charted many suns in the area of M-45. There are several thousand in this tiny sector of which some two hundred and fifty are recognized as members of this galactic cluster; the rest lie in the depths of space beyond the system. Once all of the more faintly visible stars have been examined, the total shall be far greater—closer to some half million.

This celestial group is easily tracked by first locating the giant red star—which is visible beyond Starship—known as Betelgeuse, which appears in the Orion constellation as the “shoulder” of the Great Hunter. Next finding Aldebaran, a first-magnitude star in Taurus, draw a line between the two. Extend the line in a northwest direction almost an equal distance past Aldebaran. Here it will terminate just south of the beautiful Seven Sisters. This is an attempt to visualize from Earth perspective but will be accurate enough in description in your language to allow identification. Herein, to the publishers, place a copy of the diagram as described, please.

This tightly grouped cluster of suns is in your own galaxy; six of the seven are discernible by the unaided eye. Alcyone is the brightest. It has a magnitude of 2.9 and is classified as a B-5, blue-white star whose primary element is helium with an approximate temperature of some 13,000 degrees Centigrade. The magnitude of these luminous orbs range from the meek twinkling of Sterope (Asterope) which is also blue-white, but is what is labelled B-8 with an apparent magnitude of 5.9, to the brilliance of Alcyone, which is thought by some to exceed your Sun's refulgence a thousand times or more. As difficult as it may be for your minds to fathom, this light, which you categorize and classify and gaze into the heavens to search out, has been traveling toward you for one-and-a-half centuries before you of Earth perceived it. I am herein efforting to speak in Earth perception, for it is sufficient for our purposes of becoming acquainted.

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTATIONS

It is not accidental that the predominantly recorded system is Pleiades. Cave paintings, hieroglyphics, legends, mythology, and written languages have depicted these shimmering beams as a positive force through civilization's history. Their position in the expanse of darkened heavens throughout key times in the calendar year does not fully account for the remarkable influence attributed to them.

POPE: “For see: the gath'ring flocks to shelter tend, And from the Pleiades fruitful showers descend.”

MANUDER: “When the constellations were first designed, the Pleiades rose helically at the beginning of April and were the sign of the return of spring.”

The beauty and peaceful connotations of these mysterious wonders are referred to in text, both past and present, as the Seven Stars, yet one of them is not visually seen. Almost a universal tradition, therefore, suggests that one of them has been misplaced or is hidden, and was so deemed the “Lost Pleiad” by the Greeks. Now, for some “proof of purchase”—how would a missing star be classified and spoken of—and far later in historical documentation be proven—if there was not ancient attachment? How can you relate to something unknown? Therefore, it follows that it had to have been “proven” and “known” at some time historically. It seems quite amazing that ALL cultures of antiquity were aware of the seventh star, which is masked from the view of the inhabitants of Earth!

Could it be that the future is only the past again, entered through a different gate of perception?

The repeated acknowledgement will be fully understood and explained as the jigsaw puzzle is assembled—for now, most of the pieces are still a bit scattered and some are still missing completely. There is little room for doubting, however, that since the dawn of your recorded time, these stars have been a most powerful influence and are believed, upon your place, to be a powerful influence and to hold at least a portion of the responsibility for molding the destiny of humanity.

Throughout time thousands of cultures, religions and beliefs have been introduced to this delicate planet you call home in this present experience. Many of these ideals and ideas conflict or contradict one another—and existing in every single one is a positive/negative flow of information. However, in all of the societies and civilizations that have been researched for this connection, one topic remains alluded to as a consistent enlightening force, found in the earliest texts and legends—it is the mystifying cluster of suns, called Pleiades.

You will find that tracking the source of verbal legend is most difficult, if not impossible—until the Oral Tradition and teachings are brought forth and unfolded as we will now be doing—here and through the Lakota Brother, Little Crow, of the Lakota Sioux in permission and commission from Wakan Tanka/Tunkonshila (Grandfather), here at the closing of the Sacred Cycle. In proper sequence of information projection with the Journals, THE SACRED HILL WITHIN will come forth as confirmation of this truth within the Journals as a gift unto man from Creator/Creation that you might know your Source and your Roots.

SHOCKER

You can find truth in the hereditary conversations, from most unrelated areas of your world, which correctly reflect upon the Pleiades as the “Center of the Universe”, the “Seat of Immortality”, and the “Home of God”. Intangible as these sources might be, it is only circumstantial that these legacies left a definite mark in diverse civilizations. Well, let us move beyond circumstantial and into correlations exhibiting evidence of a massive contact with Pleiadian cosmonauts somewhere in your past, little brethren.

LET US PEER INTO HISTORY:

The Hopi named them “Choo ho kan”, meaning those who cling together—and they, too, consider themselves direct descendants of the inhabitants of the cluster. The Hopi, as well as the Navajo and other cultures dispersed around the world, used a calendar that allowed them to chart the seasons, special events, and ceremonial rites with uncanny accuracy. They used a system based on a 260-day “Sacred Round”, or minor cycle, and a 365-day year, a major cycle which equaled a period between the midnight culminations of the Pleiades. Any day calculated on these cycles would not repeat itself for 18,980 days (or, 52 years).

In the Kiva of the Mesas, Sacred Temple of the Mesas, the Hopi ceremoniously “light the new fire”. This occurs every 52 years when the temple’s sacred points align with the stars, Choo ho kan. All fires are extinguished throughout the nation and rekindled from a sacred fire produced by the holy men. The young men of the tribe learn the importance of the Pleiades early in life, for initiation into the spiritual ways takes place only when the cherished cluster is directly overhead at night—so you see, this is a most powerful time of the annual cycle!

The Dakota Ehanni stories, which are tales of the world previous to the Dakota emergence, speak of the Tayamni, the home of their ancestors, and the reason for the seven tribes... the Pleiades. The Seven Sisters play a major role in their history as well as their present-day culture. In May, the month of Hanblaceya (I believe I translate correctly as ‘vision quest’), the Dakota communicate with the spirits. Astronomy tells you that the Pleiades rise with the Sun in May—and the Dakota oral history tells you that the home of the spirits is the Pleiades. The older Dakotas say that when you die, your spirit goes to the Milky Way and turns south—south to the Seven Stars.

The Navajo named the sparkling suns the “Dilyehe”, home of the black god; and the Osage believe their society was once pure of spirit and journeyed from the stars to Earth.

The Iroquois believe the twinkling orbs represent seven young people who guard the holy seed throughout the night. Prayers for happiness were addressed unto them, and during ceremonial rites, the calumet was symbolically presented to them. After all, these stars were the home of their ancestors.

There is a lovely legend among the Native Americans as exemplified in a tale from the Onondaga:

“A long time ago a party of hunters journeyed through the woods in search of a good hunting ground. Having found one, they proceeded to build their lodges for the winter, while the children gathered together to dance and sing.

“While the children were thus engaged, an old man dressed in white feathers, whose flowing hair shone like silver, appeared among them and bid them cease dancing lest a mysterious force befall them, but the children danced on unmindful of the warning, and presently they observed that they were rising little by little into the air.

“One of them exclaimed, ‘Do not look back, for something strange is taking place.’ One of the children disobeyed this warning and, looking back, became a falling star. The six other children reached the high heavens safely and can now be seen dancing in the Pleiades... the stars they became.”

The Hohokam, a Pima word meaning “that which has vanished”, disappeared from the arid Arizona desert they had so successfully irrigated and tamed. Although no one knows why they vanished or where they went, legend claims they returned to their home in the stars—to Pleiades.

The Creeks claim to have come to Earth from the stars in spirit form to become flesh and blood. Each year a medicine man who has served the apprenticeship of seven years performs the “green corn dance” where he takes seven ears of corn from seven fields of the seven clans to insure a healthy harvest.

The intent is to bring forth THE SACRED HILL WITHIN, in seven volumes—in length for reading in one sitting appropriate per each revealing.

These wondrous connections could go on for volumes of material—each attached and coming from all directions of your planet: Australian Aborigines, Mayans, Aztecs, Incas and on and on, but the document would become unwieldy and I would like to focus on that which is better recognized and known today.

I would, however, like to give you one more illustration of the connections and point out the diversity of geographic location for original belief traditions: Huang-Ti, the “Yellow Emperor” of China (2697-2587 BC), is considered by many Taoists to be a miraculous being who succeeded in attaining immortality. During his reign utensils of wood, clay pottery and metal were manufactured; boats and carts were constructed and utilized and the medium of currency was originated. Provinces of the vast country were mapped, accupressure and acupuncture became sciences, and the Emperor is generally acknowledged as the father of holistic medicine. Huang-Ti claimed that much of this rapid development began because of conversations held in court with his consultants—beings from the Pleiades.

I would like to herein point out that in 1975 AD, on your planet, contacts from Pleiadian persons began in regular sequence. The original thrust was in Switzerland which was a non-warring country, neutral in political arenas and open of mind. There have been photographs, materials for scientific study, etc., left for you to examine. These have caused great pain and suffering for the contacts. Work has been discounted and disinformation thrust upon a deceived public. We herein intend to repeat the information and again, man can do that which he will with it. I would, however, stress the suggestion that you consider this information most carefully, indeed. You as a species locked to the planet Earth had better come to grips with your circumstance and look beyond the lies thrust upon you by your controllers—you are in the time of Kali (chaos) and if you look into your prophecies, you will find this is very nearly the closing time of the cycles. When that loop closes it will be a “hot time in the old town tonight”!

SEPARATION IMPOSSIBLE

As you come into understanding of beginnings, you will desire to argue and denounce connections with star beings and etheric angelic beings—so be it. You can “desire” all ye wish—it will not change truth.

You are descendents of that which was referred to as the ones from the skies who could “fly”—in many and varied manners. You are what has been referred to as the clan of the winged ones, or more generally put: The Bird Tribes. Is it not time to preen your flight feathers? Salu. Hatonn to stand-by as we close this segment. Thank you for your service. Saalomé

WORDS OF WISDOM FROM HATONN

CONTACT OR SPECTRUM?

I want to briefly respond to a most unusual question from a totally "out of the blue" person: "It appears Spectrum will fail, possibly close, so will you go back to writing for CONTACT or what?"

I have never stopped writing for CONTACT—but I have NOT written, nor have my compatriots written for Spectrum. Tails wag a lot of dogs, my friends. Therefore, "or what" has no meaning.
