RE: PERUVIAN GOLD, BONUS 3392-181. LT. COL. AL MARTIN (RET.) REFERENCE FROM BOOK, THE CONSPIRATORS

ALWAYS HARD TO BELIEVE

Hatonn—I am not interested in convincing anyone of anything but I will offer you input as to what insiders KNOW and now present while also protecting our own people who must always act in Truth and, as always in the political eye, in literal sheltering of their lives.

In the process of discussing some of these things you will now have to understand more clearly our own relationships as Doris Ekker, through registration of Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn, has literally become established as my "POWER OF ATTORNEY". Moreover, THIS is why all the consideration and negation of everyone and his puppy considering themselves to have replaced "Dharma" and claim all sorts of fraudulent standings.

"Hatonn" is up for anyone's claim, I suppose, (right or wrong) but Gyeorgos Ceres Hatonn is NOT.

We have come forth with an incredible and massive task to accomplish and that is exactly what we plan to do.

To you who just couldn't believe such a massive program might well be in our own mission of accomplishment, I am often sorry for your misperceptions but it changes nothing of our task of achievement.

There has been great confusion and delusion as V.K. Durham set about trying to fraudulently take for herself that which was NOT hers in any measure for the taking in any way.

As you read Col. Martin's writings, however, you will see (you who know facts) that he has not given forth correct names of either corporations or the "holder" to which he will refer as in "retaining him" in the Peruvian matter.

You will note that he will also refer to Russell Herman as "Durham" and that of course is because we tried working with V.K. Durham while under the assumption, although Herman had told us otherwise when making his assignment, that Russell and Vina Katherine were married. He said they were not married and that has been verified.

Since Herman did, we assume, live with her as she claimed, we respected her position as we had no reason to do otherwise.

Finally, we find that every presentation made on her part was fraudulent and is literally criminal in intent.

You will find that Col. Martin will refer to the massive sums of money it would require to sort the mess and uncover the "creators" and so it has. It has required both investment of time (incalculable) and money which has required everything even hoped to hold if our attempts at bringing to harvest these fruits should fail.

And yes, since we set off on this Odyssey we have lost many of our mates and yea, a few lawyers, literally, to death and change of intent.

We note that one of our contacts, even in Manila as an author and friend, from upstart was able to check and realize what we offer is TRUE and valid. We recognize that at least one of those parties “knew” due to his friendship with one, General John K. Singlaub (often called Jack).

Gen. Singlaub was close in all the Bush enterprises of any consequence. He is also a large presence in the “gold diggings” AND MISINFORMATION regarding the Yamashita treasures. We have no interest in either the treasure or the facts, for there is enough gold SUPPOSED TO BE IN THE CENTRAL BANK to do everything we need to accomplish in Southeast Asia JUST with the Royal Family established, BY LAW, as holdings. If in fact the now privately-owned Central Bank does not longer hold the gold, they will have to retrieve it and therefore holding receipts will suffice until the hard commodity is replaced in its proper vault.

Our holdings in Global Alliance Investment Association have not been denied—anywhere. However, the Central Bank has handled the circumstance with “it’s fictitious” but without true reference to WHAT, exactly, is “fictitious”. Their approach has been to send a form letter to holders with an attached clipping from the “pro-administration” newspaper listing several scams, cons and counterfeit operations—NONE OF WHICH EVEN REMOTELY RELATES TO US.

Very soon after arriving in Manila our attorney was contacted on several occasions and was subsequently interviewed at length and finally it was determined that those investigators could FIND NOTHING wrong with our documents or our claims.

In addition, one party who was on the Monetary Board and is married to one of the most prominent lady Senators, with E.J., Charles Neil and Rick Martin IN HIS OFFICE called the then Bank Governor, Singson, to inquire as to use of said documents. The answer was: “Yes, just keep it quiet and small enough to not cause waves.” This is paraphrased although specific words can be shown.

This party was interested and was, in fact, trying to establish a grand development with golf courses and many other things while the wife (Senator, who will probably run for the next Presidency) wanted to put together a massive tree reforestation project.

Because of other problems in the new government all such facilities (including hold on all golf clubs) were scrubbed. The efforts and contacts were simply put aside as far more important projects started pouring forth. Since we know these people know we are still here, they will call when they choose; we remain too busy to attend it further. The Senator in point got totally

REF: PERUVIAN GOLD CERTIFICATE

[Beginning second paragraph pg. 104:]

... I’d also like to interject at this point the infamous case of the Peruvian Gold Certificate Scam, engineered in 1988 by George Bush, Sr.

[H: I need to correct this misperception right up top because much took place regarding that Gold Certificate 3392-181 BEFORE 1988. A corporation, Cosmos Seafood Energy Marketing Ltd. was, in fact, formed in 1985 to HOUSE that certificate—and in 1989 the certificate was changed out lawfully and legally to a CONTRACT and put into that corporation. That corporation was formed by Russell Herman and his Greek friend, Cecelia Xalis. All of the records are there and available.]

George, himself, was involved, and so was his counsel C. Boyden Gray. Helping in this fraud was George’s personal friend and very loyal Republican scamskateer, then Nevada Secretary of State, Frankie Sue DelPapa.

Frankie, as a matter of fact, will probably be making a gubernatorial bid in Nevada, now that Bill Miller is out of the scene.

But this is the famous case of that Peruvian gold certificate which was one of the unusual gold certificates issued by the Trans-Continental Agreement between the United States and certain South American countries in 1875, wherein the United States Government agreed to support certain South American countries which were then in some financial difficulty, including Peru.

The United States Treasury issued a limited number of high-value gold certificates based on its own deposits. Simply put, these were then hypothecated by South American central banks, which could then be used to borrow bullion against the U.S. Treasury.

Almost all of these certificates were redeemed in 1913 and 1914. However, one certificate was left outstanding, which it’s believed was an oversight at the time. These certificates were compounded in perpetuity, that is, they had no limitation.

The interest was payable in gold and compounded in perpetuity. And the compounding of said gold payment was accrued at a fixed price of twenty dollars an ounce.

[H: This is not accurate, for it became, as valued, at whatever the London “fix” might be at any given time as averaged in an annual accounting. Either way the sums are quite outrageous and is the reason we have set reasonable limitations on the monster ready to devour the world.]

Now what happened, therefore, is that this one remaining certificate consequently became worth a fortune.

Although it had been technically listed as canceled by the United States Treasury after the expiration of the redemption period in 1914, George Bush was able to get a waiver (as he knew he would, given his position) from the U.S. Treasury, indicating that this was still a valid and negotiable instrument.

Bush knew if he could get his hands on this instrument, it would be worth a fortune to hypothecate, which is exactly what happened.

This certificate, through a long series of transactions, ultimately winds up in the hands of a retired Secret Service agent, Mr. Durham, who at one time, as a matter of fact, had worked with one of George Bush’s Secret Service security details.

Through some underhandedness, Bush was able to garner control of this instrument through essentially out-and-out fraud committed by Frankie Sue DelPapa regarding a Nevada corporation, which had been formed by Mr. Durham and others to hold this certificate and the rights thereunto, called the Cosmos Investment Corporation.

[H: The name of this corporation, of course, is accurately: Cosmos Seafood Energy Marketing Ltd.]

DelPapa essentially switched all the officers and principals and directors of the Cosmos Corporation into another corporation that had been formed by George Bush and some others known as the Hellenic Investment Holding Group, Limited.

[H: This is likewise incorrect but could well have happened as well but OUR corporation was, while working with V.K. Durham, Hellenic Express International, Inc. (HEII).]

Durham subsequently died. His widow tried to pound the drum on this thing for a long time, but couldn’t get anywhere with it. Simply put, the mainstream media that had been interested in this thing considered it too old and too conspiratorial to touch.

But I have a lot of the documents. Dinnerstein got involved in this and he discovered what had happened.

It’s interesting to note the route that this certificate takes once it gets in the hands of George Bush. It winds up getting hypothecated at both Sumitomo and Daiwa Banks in Tokyo. It is re-hypothecated at Jarlska Bank of Copenhagen. Re-hypothecated again through the Greek National Bank.

Papandreou was still in power. Papandreou and George Bush Sr. had been involved in many marginal business transactions involving the surreptitious hypothecation of gold bullion at the Bank of Greece through the Union Bank of Switzerland and Credit Lyonnais in France and Bank Paribas.

Of course, I was not directly involved in any transaction relating to this. I was subsequently asked—Dinnerstein and I—to become involved for a certain fee on the owner’s behalf in this matter.

A separate book would have to be written about it, for it goes to the very heart of the great right-wing cabal—the way everything works and what it’s all about. It exposes transactions that are decades old; transactions that were frauds in themselves.

[H: WELL, IT IS NOT A FRAUD NOW!!]

You can see through the continuation of this deal a pattern where new fraud has to be committed to pay back old fraud and so on.

I think what frightened the mainstream media is the incredible sums of money that are involved. And ultimately, a Peruvian gold certificate turned out to be the seed or germination of a series of transactions that ultimately forced Daiwa and Sumitomo to create fictitious trading losses in order to cover losses incurred in a series of fraudulently obtained, politically-related loans.

Anyway, this is simply so big that I would perhaps just briefly mention it, only because I have such precise detailing of it. But I would not attempt to connect the dots into the vortex of the way everything works and what it’s really all about.

It’s simply too big, and it would immediately be looked at as something conspiratorial, which, of course, has always been the Republican line in an effort to discredit anyone.

It was only in recent years, in 1995, that I was again retained by representatives of the original owner, or his widow, should I say, in an effort to negotiate with Bush or to see if they wanted to do anything about it insofar as they effectively absconded with said instrument.

So I talked to an attorney who had previously represented me in Miami, Neil Lewis, who is very closely aligned with Republican interests in Miami and is a personal friend of both Neil and Jeb Bush. I told Neil [Lewis] the circumstances. And he said, “Give me a couple of days and I’ll get back to you.”

And he did, in fact, talk to Neil Bush. After a few days, Neil Lewis got back to me and said that the Bushes feel that there are so many layers of protection between them and this transaction that nobody will ever be able to uncover it and they simply did not wish to deal.

So, that ended that, because it would obviously take enormous resources to fully uncover this fraud. And to actually challenge the perpetrators of the fraud would require resources certainly beyond that of the average individual.

[END QUOTING]

It is rather a shame to interrupt the ongoing outlay of information—BUT—we are busy as bees just getting this job done, readers. The story is worthy of many books on the subject.

I wanted to offer this because it is important to have you KNOW that you are precious to us and in spite of all the pitfalls along this pathway, we are incredibly appreciative to you for allowing us to get this far down this road. We have established the validity of our “holdings” and we have established

THE WAY to make it work. Now, isn’t that some kind of MIRACLE all in itself? I would, indeed, say so without hesitation.

Are we finished?

No, and perhaps “finished” is never a worthy word for use with anything we attempt to accomplish. Possibilities abound on every front and in every direction. Patience wears thin, financial assets are going begging in want BUT we are getting it DONE inch by tedious inch.

PRODUCTS

Diane is now off to serve her “whatever it is called this week” but now the others, knowing what was used to deal her misery, can go forth and, separate from her, move back to making available the products you have had to go without during the legal challenges.

I believe that you will be able to get information through Artemis although Diane is no longer, of course, even a consultant.

I am asking that the New Gaia labels be utilized as they can be corrected, updated and replaced for all approved products to again be made available.

Please remember that even the “silver colloid” which is now listed as a “new drug” is not at all unlawful to obtain AS A SUPPLEMENT.

I am asking that information as we offered prior to any “on market” item be run again, especially with Gaiandriana. [MM: Please see “Understanding Gaiandriana” on page 4.] It is such a worthy product and it was NEVER even under question.

I will remind everyone, however, that labels are important.

Example: Gaiandriana as was established on its label listed several items which OF COURSE do not show up in itemized breakdown. This is because, although added to the maturing product, they are totally converted and the outcome is what might be referred to as “living water” with a very high frequency and “living drias”. The drias, however, require microscopic visualization and no FDA agent would even bother. Therefore I am asking that the labels be changed to reflect that merging process.

There will no longer be anything named “AquaGaia”. That product was claimed by the FDA to have misrepresented its description. I have asked that another product be utilized instead which is “mitochondria” referenced. The mitochondrias are the fuel conversion system which can be enhanced with dria- or chondriana-enhanced solution.

Anyway, this is enough for today.

We have not forgotten ANYONE, even our enemies as self-proclaimed.

We do believe, however, that YOU need to know what we are about and that we have never for one moment deviated from our goal even as unpleasant as the journey might be from time to time.

In appreciation for your attention and interest.

And to those “enemies”: Sorry people, you just happened to be WRONG in your assessments of our humble beings.—GCH

UNDERSTANDING GAIANDRIANA

REC #3 HATONN

HOW DO THEY WORK, THOUGH?

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1993 1:17 PM
YEAR 6, DAY 151

LIVING FORM OF LIFE (GAIANDRIANA)

As we sit to write on this subject I am, again, stuck with using that which has been put into what I have to consider, crude language. I am forced, by labels placed before my expression, into utilizing incorrect perceptions to achieve any relative understanding. Obviously, terms such as nucleotides, human genes, DNA, RNA, etc., are readily recognized. Then come misperceptions, but remaining suitable for use, such as scrolls, chondriana, etc., which have been already utilized and, therefore, give some understanding without gross misperception. Then we have “scalar” which represents “life” energy known more widely as “prana” energy, etc.

I want you to realize that “chondriana” is a term which I cannot now simply “toss aside”, for it is what has been “named” as an entity recognized by many researchers. This is a “living crystalline” life form—cell, if you will, with the duality of all things—male/female, etc. It is not recognized on other planes as such but rather “Gaia” meaning “living” and “driana” meaning cellular or crystalline cellular “form”. These “forms” take the very sex identity of male—“chondrion” which greatly resembles its precursor, “mitochondria” of your cells. The mitochondria of your cell is as a unique organelle and its main purpose task is converting glucose to useable adenosine triphosphate (ATP) molecules. This guy is aggressive and active. He is really looking for that lovely lady who might be called his “twin flame” by your metaphysical searchers. These creatures were independent life forms many billions of years past—and now God has presented them in their “whole” form to serve you.

The female is a lovely, passive, single-layered-membrane type of creature that becomes energized by the male during the “courting” process.

The male gives protections to the female from any virus, bacteria, malignant or mutant cells—and if placed within the chondriana’s environment, the male gives “birth” to chondriettes, best described as “killers”. These are ancestors to your lymphocytes, “the T cells”.

The killer cells sequence DNA production of specific protein-digesting enzymes that break up the cell membranes of foreign invaders, etc. Note that the life forms themselves are the primary energy source—but foreign invaders stimulate a fast reproductive cycle within the gaiandriana (or recognized by researchers as chondriana) by supplying extra food.

It is important for WH to understand that conversion fuel comes from ATP “ion” complexing with magnesium ion. I have laid out a lot of this prior to this writing and will not continue the boring outlay. However, to make sense, if you just entered door one, you need at least this brief statement. Scrolls represent the “energy packets” which come from and are received from “cosmic radiation”. We won’t even burden you, at this point, by “scalar” confusion.

The “males” (Gaiandrions [chondrions]) give imprint of their own biological defenses to destroy non-human invading life forms. It will become immediately obvious that their application is magnificent in fighting off any and ALL diseases. These gaiandrions can be separately “injected” (but we aren’t going to deal with that yet) intravenously into the body. As we have written before, at one hour after injection, the patient will have a shaking “T-Cell reaction”. We are not going to get into this because this is not acceptable in the continental U.S.—and I do not intend to complicate this natural substance with any kind of “treatment programs”. The same result can be brought into experience by taking it “easy” and allowing the gaiandriana to do its perfect work without provocation of the societal structure, medical community or governmental control boards. God didn’t go around “injecting” anything intravenously to do His wondrous work. Will you EVER have available these more rapid methods? I hope so but that is up to you in reclamation of control over your sovereign beings.

For Dr. Young I am going to re-present information—and Earth-bound “laws” of quantum mechanics are sufficient. The electron between two carbon atoms fluctuates between positive and negative carbon ions. To assure the stability between two carbons in, let us use the diamond lattice, it can be proved that the carbon in the diamond is, indeed, in the positive and negative ionic state, and that this is also responsible for the diamond’s “hardness”. Because polarity is resonating back and forth, it seems non-polar. Researchers can produce at least two types of diamonds at atmospheric pressure by pairing homo-polar carbon ions. This, of course, in turn proves that a diamond is homo-polar.

This is only important to the extent that it represents a third application for prana technology—“scalar” if you must. Earlier work has shown that, for instance, to make a diamond, you must have an atomic syntropic transducer. This allows transducing “scroll” waves (free energy braiding into photons) to the higher energy level in order to control chemical bonding. Scroll resonant energy leaves its signature on everything throughout the whole universe including ALL FORMS OF LIFE.

If you introduce single ionic nitrogen to form carbon bonds by an exchange reaction in the lattice—substituting nitrogen for a carbon isomorphously—these carbon-nitrogen bonds form paramagnetic centers, and convert orthohydrogen to parahydrogen with paramagnetic properties.

Since this is very integrated with “cold fusion” and “free energy”, I shall not continue to outlay further, the implications. For that, you come to me directly! I will continue with the subject in point, however, and I believe to you who are awaiting answers—they may well become quite clear as you follow this through. All things are related to all things and what is sauce for the goose is equally sauce for the gander. You will find that by adjusting humidity—i.e., say, dropping it to around 6%—you drastically reduce the conductivity of the air as well as the static charge of the air. If you are working with plants in research—at this level they will tend to move into dormancy. Phototransducers in the chlorophyll, stall due to lack of conductivity (it is not relative to moisture content as might be thought). At this low humidity fruits will cease growth even if intensive irrigation is provided. If you wish to continue growth, then surroundings must be altered by raising local conductivity artificially. I hope this is giving you insight into growing “fields” or “greenhouse plant” growing.

The syntropic phototransducer is very similar to autotrophic and heterotrophic transducers which Nature built within the living cells. They are, therefore, the prerequisites to life formation and continued existence. This is why tampering with your atmosphere is going to kill you all if it isn’t stopped.

OK, you now see how the Carbon-Nitrogen (C-N) bond, semi-absorbed, promotes paramagnetic sites where “ortho-to-para” conversion takes place. By upsetting the ortho/para ratio the hydrogen will lift ortho-delta-positive link to the delta-positive, HWC-delta-positive [HNC?], and so on. This opens the way to transport reactions—transporting suboxides coupled to para-hydrogen, vapor phase at low temperature.

Researchers have already utilized this technology to build alternate rows of nitrogen-doped carbon atoms where the layers of 111 oriented surfaces formed a superlattice (all 111-100 and 110 faces were constructed from the bent carbon rings of graphite). DO NOT ASK MY SCRIBE TO EVEN CONSIDER OFFERING INPUT ON THESE SUBJECTS—THEY ARE HIGHLY TECHNICAL, PRIVATE AND SHE DOESN’T KNOW A DAMNED THING ABOUT IT. If you who would work with this do not understand it—get with me or Tesla or someone who DOES.

Pioneers in the field used the para-proton transport reaction technology for new forms of metallic carbons, diamond, etc., with different distribution spacings. More important to the subject in point, there have been synthesized hundreds of exotic new materials which are years and years (centuries) ahead of the natural evolution development. Through capturing the free energy (scrolls) you can harness the Sun’s clean energy for a pollution-free world.

What you are doing with the gaiandriana is utilizing a syntropic transducer not only able to stimulate solar fermentation, but also you can produce electric current and free hydrogen by simply transducing the lower-level energy. Chlorophylls have different geometries of antenna. This produces different patterns of isobars, as the resonant molecule absorbs or emits its transduced photon energy. The three-dimensional field so produced follows the scroll pattern sideways, which is similar to the three-dimensional field produced in the very first cold fusion process back in your sixties. Electrons excited by the scrolls are different from electrons in the normal state—as verified by their own tiny fingerprints on an EPR spectrum [MM: Determined by Electron Paramagnetic Resonance (EPR) spectroscopy, as opposed to the Electron-Nuclear Double Resonance (ENDOR) spectrum or the Nuclear Magnetic Resonance (NMR) spectrum]. Through this, energy couples with the nuclei and the orientation of the nuclei differ with respect to an external field. The larger the number of excited electrons—and if their spectrum is proportional to their number—then the higher the number, the narrower the band will be.

Scrolls determine the size of the photon that is absorbed by the spin-aligned electron or proton; this alters their position correspondingly. Thus their energy level is transduced to the absorption frequency to match the absorption frequency of the host electron or proton. Changing the direction of the spin on a proton depends on the strength of the external field, and can also change the absorption spectrum due to spin polarization.

A strong North pole of the proton can suck in countless scrolls by their South poles and reverse the spin. By forcing the position of the proton to the opposite attracting position via scrolls—and by reversing the orientation of the proton—ortho-proton can be converted to para-proton. In the atomic wrench, the nitrogen and electrons result in hyperfine interaction. The hyper-excited carbon-nitrogen transducer can lase an immense photon flux and, subsequently, transduce enough upshift of the frequency to reverse the proton spin.

THE SEED OF LIFE: FREE ENERGY

A three-dimensional vortex, performing three-dimensional motion, inverting through its poles back and forth and changing signs constantly. Gosh, this is hard because this interchanging is explained best in Germain's presentation of "Light", "God", etc. Oh, well, this is for only one or two of you at this time, at any rate. (WH: Besides you and I, only two others have this writing, so please help protect it. Thank You, E.J.)

The scrolls form strands with matching frequency of oscillation and equal wavelength. These strands of scrolls braid into photon vortexes. The vortex of an electron is fed by 918 pairs of photons.

A 917-pair electron vortex will copy the genetic trait to form the proton, and 918 electrons form the neutron. Every time an atomic vortex inverts through the North pole of the proton, the scrolls form a coherent field followed by pole splitting which then reverts through a white hole (assuming the North pole of the proton to be considered a "black hole"), followed by an incoherent field. Each absorbed scroll adds up to increase the mass of the host. However, due to the increased mass, the spin will change on the host, followed by a change in wavelength and frequency of oscillation.

WORKING FREE ENERGY

The plasma membrane of the living cells is permeable to ions that are driven by the self-induced field generated by free energy (scrolls). The net result is an electrical potential between the inside of the cell (-) and the outside of the cell (+). Sodium and chlorine ions are responsible for the conductivity in the plasma medium. (This will require some reference material but I do not want you cluttered with it at this time. I have lots to say and if you go off the deep end, you will be boggled "intentionally". All of this will be unfolded in its proper sequence, so take it easy.)

The cell membrane, along with its plasma, acts as a condenser, and is negatively charged inside with respect to the outside, which is positive. The condenser membrane is charged by the scrolls (static charge of the air). The potential difference varies between 40-80mv depending on the scroll-energy density. Such free-energy density will vary with the incoming cosmic rays, and also with atmospheric conditions such as pressure, moisture content, static charge, etc. Keep in mind I said "cosmic rays", not "Sun".

What you must hold in your hearts here is that, in general, all biological activity STRICTLY FOLLOWS THE WEATHER PATTERNS, being dependent on the unmolested atmospheric conditions.

OK, I want you to not be preoccupied with ANYTHING as I lay this out for you. I don't want you to go, at this time, and research any other's work. At this time I don't even want you to blow your brains out because clarity seems elusive.

Now, to consider the substance with which we began this writing, living crystals, we must consider the prana technology which results in the very...

ENERGIES OF LIFE

This is a fun and most miraculous "twist".

The asymmetric carbon atoms in living crystals polarize and "twist" the light (photons) in opposite directions according to the mirror image of the crystals. Likewise, the bonding energies line up asymmetrically according to the force of attraction. These optically active crystals are twisting the strands into a double helix, thus leading into the life process. Further, the storage batteries (phosphates) are located on the strands bonded to five-carbon sugars of asymmetric crystals, where the mirror image of the energy transducers laterally bridge the strands with T (Thymine) and C (Cytosine) molecules—this places the amino groups in full mirror-image position. Once again, the energy pattern dominates the life cycle.

Optically active crystals rotate the quantum of light in both clockwise (CW) and counter-clockwise (CCW) directions (CW crystals absorbing, CCW crystals transmitting) by twisting the plane of the polarized light. If joined, the two tendencies may cancel. In this very action you can see the value of LIGHT and frequencies of the various "tones" or spectrum rays. At some point you can actually devisualize if the right frequency is attained. Likewise—you can "ascend" (Oh, my goodness! What have I said?). Herein is the very reason that I do not want any of you rushing off to research another's work—because obviously—they do not have what is needed and I must give it to you in a most subtle manner. This is "why" this writing will not have meaning to almost everyone.

The introduction of protonic hydrogen reverses the tendencies! The enzymes utilize this characteristic to cut loose hydrogen ions from the chain—thereby reversing tendencies and separating the strand by the reverse twist of light (hotdog!—going and coming!). Energy compounds in living organisms have asymmetric carbon atoms and the organisms make use of one of the forms in synthesis with the exception of the double helix. The simple sugars in the living tissue fall into a D-series, while the amino acids (the building blocks of proteins) fall into an L-series. Unpolarized light travels in all directions in disarray like magnetic moments. Light passing through these living crystals will emerge polarized! While the array of macrocrystals is in lockstep, their fields restrain the photons, cleaving and reflecting them polarized, with the twisted polarization plane setting the path for the very evolution of life!

This optical activity of the life crystals monitors the twisting of the DNA—and the strands, the mirror images of the macrocrystals in lockstep which, with extended power, twists the plane CW and CCW. Once the DNA is zipped, the molecules are bonded in close position and the CW and the CCW twists (opposing tendencies) are neutralized. Enzymes are utilizing these tendencies to activate the right molecule (macrocrystal) to rotate the energy in the proper direction to zip or unzip the DNA strands. The key to the changing rotation lies with the positive ions which are present as bridges in the strands. The enzymes are able to turn these keys to levorotary or dextro-rotary position.

Ah, and, therefore, if you can introduce the frequency (which at some point you shall be able to do) of, say, 16.9433 directed even from a very common short-wave radio band (within the weather satellite range), you will find invisibility taking place. That is the frequency at which we transmit to Dharma—and also it is the frequency of "visualization" of our own craft and persons. I just thought you might find this an interesting point. Furthermore, it WILL answer some of Wendell's questions regarding the work he is doing in other transmitting projects left herein unnamed. Indeed, the procedure "works" and at that transmission frequency will travel very, very rapidly. Furthermore, it builds in intensity as it resonates instead of dissipating. This actually transcends "speed of light" or any "sound" and can be targeted precisely. We are considering, herein, the speed of thought. This is far advanced of Earth-technology at this time—but hold your breath, students, and we'll get there. If you try to prove this by your regular technology—especially without that which is known and denied you—you will simply get lost in the confusion. Know that it is possible, simple and will be given; but please continue in your patience and allow flexibility in thought—almost to the reversal of all perceptions as have been "taught" by the idiots calling themselves scientists.

I think this is enough for this sitting—my scribe's fingers are weary and the brain has turned to mush. Overload is not our intent and if we continue as we are, with that which is given in other expressions of endeavors—all shall work beautifully in its proper presenting and understanding. We must, however, begin to lay these fundamentals forth as we move along with other things for the "all" project. That means that you ones who do not yet hear "us" clearly will have to be even more patient. You are "hearing" just fine—you simply do not yet "trust it". You will gain rapidly as we continue to "practice".

You are blessed, indeed, and we are humble in appreciation that the "few" of you have lingered and continued your works as necessary to arrive at TODAY and TOMORROW. Be at peace, we are getting there!

Hatonn to take leave. Thank you, Dharma—I know this is as boring as a task can be but please understand the "need" in this interim time of "learning" communication skills for the brothers. Salu.

But back to living crystals: Nucleotides are purines, or pyrimidines, with either ribose or deoxyribose and a phosphate group. In the nucleic acid's structure, the sugar portion of the nucleotide is bonded to the sugar portion of the next, by means of a phosphate group attached to both. A sugar phosphate backbone runs the length of the molecule, and from it extends purines and pyrimidines, one to each nucleotide. Nucleoproteins consist of two parts of large macromolecules.

WITHOUT A WAR?

RE: COMMENTS ON THE CARLYLE GROUP (THE EX-PRESIDENT'S CLUB, AS PROMISED WEEKS AGO). PHILIPPINES: BLEAK DAYS. STATE OF THE CHAOS

STATE OF ECONOMIC CRISIS BANKRUPTCY-CRISIS

Hatonn—It has been announced and boldly headlined as of three days ago that “THE PHILIPPINES IS BANKRUPT!”

Then yesterday the headlines read that President GMA is POISED to declare a national crisis due to inability to pay salaries, budget payments on anything in the provinces and generally “take over the government” under Executive Order.

TODAY:

Well, the talking heads are disclaiming a “real” emergency and the reasons given are that “unlike other desperate nations, the Philippines can always borrow plenty to stay afloat and that has been guaranteed”. I would suggest that probably that is a World Bank/IMF/U.S. “guarantee”?

Lehman Bros. has already put in its two billion and has taken all the prime property of the Non-Performing Loans out of several banks—and the money was NEVER SEEN.

The truth has, however, come out from the Philippines to South Africa that the Central Bank is indeed “privately” owned and so too is the Finance Dept./Treasury of both governments controlled through employee relationships.

There still seems to be some MISPERCEPTION that Global is somehow an enemy and yes indeed, Ekkers have been investigated over and over again and, according to statements made YESTERDAY at the Central Bank, they were not found in any way amiss even to refusal to take any “up-front” money.

Ekkers have followed every guideline—all documents are found to be in perfect order—and are considered “just good people”.

Moreover, the minute that anyone from the team of the oppressive wants to “deal”, i.e., George Bush, Gen. Singlaub—you name the representative, we shall all be quite happy to host the callers.

Mr. Bush could now, with full recognition, take a “Global Alliance Program” and change the very status of, most especially, the United States of America and fill in the backup support, properly based on gold value, around the globe.

In other words, chelas, we have proven-up on the “SuperFund” and presented a way to honor it and bring order out of the potential chaos—WITHOUT A WAR.

Yes indeed, but “without a war” is certainly NOT what the Elite desire and therefore the pain and agony seem destined to continue.

We were told to “stay low” and “safe” and to not travel unless absolutely necessary. These were instructions from the U.S. Embassy and there were even “protectors” sent to make sure we were secure—but also would mind the masters. IT PAYS EVERY TIME, CHELAS.

Since we have gone the whole nine yards to prove-up on Bush’s SuperFund reality it would seem only fair that he should now consider the amazingly wondrous outcome of joining into “his own available alliance”—since half of all those massive assets, spoken of yesterday, are in security FOR the United States of America.

WAR OF THE GREEDY

In the Philippines, however, the battle rages—not over Global or even the Royal Family court orders as to land holdings and gold supposed to be in the Central Bank, but over personal attempts to get rid of adversaries and protect ongoing accepted frauds already perpetrated. NO, WE HAVE NO INVOLVEMENT OTHER THAN TO OFFER A WAY TO CLAIM THE GOLD AND, ACTUALLY, LEAVE IT “STAY-PUT”.

The arguments and “getchas” do not have to do with us but other associates involved.

There is a major scouring of immigration records in search of anything on anyone that might be out of order. It is part of the “terrorist” maze of chaos. The Philippines is now deporting people whose records are in any way out of order.

Right now there is an effort to check into and deal misery, possibly, to Mr. Struck who is German by nationality. He came to the Philippines on a perfectly good “business” visa, which seems to now have some question of personal nature.

No, it does NOT involve us in any manner whatsoever. Probably it won’t have much to do, either, with “anything”, for Mr. Struck is also living with his partner in anticipation of marriage in which he even has pre-nuptial agreements. He is a very long-time presence in this country, so politics is the name of the game, as usual.

Mr. Lozano, our current legal counsel, is in hospital with blood pressure problems, so we are in our second window of stall-out for the week, still being without necessary documents from the U.S. dealing with the Tallano “Estate” Foundation.

We missed our opportunity to clear banking due to lack of those documents but we will attempt it again, but obviously with different personalities.

The only thing that never changes is change itself. Count on it striking when you least expect it.

We have been remiss in addressing the ongoing events here in the Philippines with so many other things confronting with priority to attention. We have probably four or more “Analyses” from Domino with focus on various topics taking place on the Geopolitical scene here where the new unelected President is about to be unseated.

Furthermore, since the unseated President Estrada is now in TRIAL for his own escapades but the prosecution is finding NOTHING except lies presented by the very accusers themselves, it is a circus of sorts—while the citizens drift ever downward.

The Abu Sayyaf just yesterday snatched about nine more hostages in Sulu, so any connection in Mindanao is out for awhile, as is any trip as called for, to Malaysia for our team. There would be difficulty on the return entry and guarantees of safety are NOT worth the paper on which written. Oral agreements are most certainly not worth the paper on which they are written. Pun intended, please.

THE CARLYLE GROUP

The information here in hand has been circulating since at least October of 2001 but it is a very good representation of what it’s about as to the money to be made from the War on Terror. Most especially this holds true of President George W. Bush.

The reason it becomes important here is that former president of the Philippines, Ramos, is a major player in the Carlyle Group and the information here offered came directly from parties here in Manila. It is all about that “New World Order” of global enslavement.

Among the names you will all recognize is, of course, Former President of the Philippines, Ramos, who is Carlyle Asia Advisory Board head.

George Bush Sr., who was former Director of the CIA as well as former President of the U.S., is Carlyle’s Senior Advisor.

Former U.S. Secretary of State for Bush and currently the U.S. Counsel for Intelligence Policy, James Baker III, is Carlyle’s Senior Counselor.

Then you have a plethora of familiar faces and names like Carlucci, Darman and even Former Prime Minister of England, Major, is Carlyle’s European Chairman.

This group is certainly part of the newly defined “Axis of Corporate Evil” but we don’t want to take time to more than reference some points of interest. It is still a fact that the Carlyle Group controls, at the very least, corporate Washington.

[QUOTING News from Reality, “The Carlyle Group—Former World Leaders and Washington Insiders Make Billions”, Oliver Burkeman and Julian Borger, Wednesday October 31, 2001, The Guardian.]

How will President George W. Bush personally make millions (if not billions) from the War on Terror? The old fashioned way. He’ll inherit it.

It is hard to imagine an address closer to the heart of Americans. The offices of the Carlyle Group are on Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington, D.C., midway between the White House and the Capitol building, and within a stone's throw of the headquarters of the FBI and numerous government departments.

The address reflects Carlyle's position at the very center of the Washington establishment, but amid the frenetic politicking that has occupied the higher reaches of that world in recent weeks, few have paid it much attention. Elsewhere, few have even heard of it.

This is exactly the way Carlyle likes it. For 14 years now, with almost no publicity, the company has been signing up an impressive list of former politicians—including the first President Bush and his secretary of state, James Baker, John Major, one-time World Bank treasurer Afsaneh Masheyekhi and several Southeast Asian powerbrokers—and using their contracts and influence to promote the group. Among the companies Carlyle owns are those which make equipment, vehicles and munitions for the U.S. military, and its celebrity employees have long served an ingenious dual purpose, helping encourage investments from the very wealthy while also smoothing the path for Carlyle's defense firms.

But since the start of the "war on terrorism", the firm—unofficially valued at over $13.5 billion [H: This number is highly suspect of being in error, for it has been overwritten and an ink blob obscures the original numbers. It is easily discerned, however, that it is into the double digit "billions" and counting. We can be confident, without hesitation, that the numbers have more than doubled since this article was written anyway. The way numbers are manipulated, it doesn't matter, for the bottom line meets whatever the desired outcome might be.]—has taken on an added significance. Carlyle has become the thread which indirectly links American military policy in Afghanistan to the personal financial fortunes of its celebrity employees, not least the current president's father. And, until earlier this month (Oct. 2001), Carlyle provided another curious link to the Afghan crisis: Among the firm's multi-million-dollar investors were members of the family of Osama bin Laden.

The closest the Carlyle Group has previously come to public attention was last May, when a Seoul-based employee called Peter Chung was forced to resign from his 100,000 pound-a-year job after sending an e-mail to friends—subsequently forwarded to thousands of others—boasting of his plans to "fuck every hot chick in Korea over the next two years". The more business-oriented activities of Carlyle's staff have been conducted much more quietly, since it was founded in 1987 by David Rubenstein, a policy assistant in Jimmy Carter's administration, and two lawyer friends, the firm has been dispatching an array of former world leaders on a series of strategic networking trips.

Last year, George Bush Sr. and John Major traveled to Riyadh to talk with senior Saudi businessmen. In September 2000, Carlyle hired speakers including Colin Powell and AOL Time Warner chair Steve Case to address an extravagant party at Washington's Lanesborough Hotel in London, to explain the Florida election controversy to the wealthy attendees.

We can assume that Carlyle pays well. Neither Major's office nor Carlyle will confirm the details of his salary as European chairman—an appointment announced shortly before he left the House of Commons after the election—but we know, for the purposes of comparison, that he is paid 105,000 pounds for 28 days' work a year for an unrelated non-executive directorship. Bush gives speeches for the company and is paid with stakes in the firm's investments, believed to be worth at least $80,000 per appearance. The benefits have attracted political stars from around the world; former Philippines president Fidel Ramos is an adviser, as is former Thai premier Anand Panyarachun—as well as former Bundesbank president Karl Otto Pohl, and Arthur Levitt, former chairman of the SEC, the U.S. stock market regulator.

Carlyle partners, who include Baker and the firm's chairman, Frank Carlucci—Ronald Reagan's defense secretary and a former deputy director of the CIA—own stakes that would be worth $180 million each if each partner owned an equal slice. As in many areas of its work, though, Carlyle is not obliged to reveal the details, and chooses not to.

Among the defense firms which benefit from Carlyle's success is United Defense, a Virginia-based contractor which makes vertical missile-launch systems currently on board U.S. Navy ships in the Arabian Sea, as well as a range of other weapons delivery systems and combat vehicles; Carlyle's other holdings span an improbable range, taking in the French newspaper Le Figaro and the company which bottles Dr. Pepper.

"They are big, and they are quiet," says David Mulholland, business editor of Jane's Defense Weekly. "But they're not easy to get information out of, [but] United Defense is going to do well [in the current conflict]." United also owns Bofors, a Swedish munitions manufacturer.

Carlyle has said that it does not lobby the federal government, thus avoiding a conflict of interest when, for example, Carlucci met Rumsfeld in February when several important defense contracts were under consideration. But critics see that as a matter of definition.

"It should be a deep cause for concern that a closely held company like Carlyle can simultaneously have directors and advisers that are doing business and making money and also advising the president of the United States," says Peter Eisner, managing director of the Center for Public Integrity, a non-profit-making Washington think-tank. "The problem comes when private business and public policy blend together. What hat is former president Bush wearing when he tells Crown Prince Abdullah not to worry about U.S. policy in the Middle East? What hat does he use when he deals with South Korea, and causes policy changes there? Or when James Baker helps argue the presidential election in the younger Bush's favor? It's a kitchen-cabinet situation, and the informality involved is precisely a mark of Carlyle's success.

"The world of private equity is an inherently secretive one. Firms such as Carlyle make most of their money buying firms which are not publicly traded, overhauling them and selling them at a profit, so the process by which likely targets are evaluated is much more confidential than on the open market. "These firms certainly don't go out of their way to get into the headlines," says Steven Bell, chief economist at Deutsche Asset Management. "They'd rather make a splash in institutional Pensions Week. The aim is to realize very high returns for your investors while exerting a high degree of control over the company. You don't want to get into the headlines when you force the management to fire a director."

The process has worked wonders at United, and this month the firm announced plans to go public, giving Carlyle the chance to cash in its investment. [H: Go back and read that sentence again!]

But what sets Carlyle apart is the way it has exploited its political contacts. When Carlucci arrived there in 1989, he brought with him a phalanx of former subordinates from the CIA and the PENTAGON, and an awareness of the scale of business a company like Carlyle could do in the corridors and steak-houses of Washington. In a decade and a half, the firm has been able to realize a 34% rate of return on its investments, and now claims to be the largest private equity firm in the world. Success brought more investors, including the international financier George Soros and, in 1995, the wealthy Saudi Binladen family, who insist they long ago severed all links with their notorious relative. The first president Bush is understood to have visited the Binladins in Saudi Arabia twice on the firm's behalf.

The Carlyle Group does not employ anyone at its Washington headquarters to deal with the press. Inquiries about the links with the Binladins (as most of the family choose to spell their name) are instead referred to someone outside the company, on condition he is referred to only as "a source familiar with the relationship". This source says: "I can confirm the fact that any Binladin Group investment in Carlyle has been terminated or is being terminated. It amounted to a $2 million investment in the Carlyle II Fund, which was anyway a very small portion of a $1.3 billion fund. In the scheme of the investments and in the scheme of the business of either party it was very small. We have to get this into perspective. But I think there was a sense that there were questions being raised and some controversy, and for such a small amount of money it was something that we wanted to put behind us. It was just a business decision."

But if the Binladins' connection to the Carlyle Group lasted no more than six years, the current President Bush's own links to the firm go far deeper. In 1990, he was appointed to the board of one of Carlyle's first purchases, an airline food business called Caterair, which they eventually sold at a loss. He left the board in 1992, later to become Governor of Texas. Shortly thereafter, he was responsible for appointing several members of the board which controlled the investment of Texas teachers' pension funds. A few years later the board decided to invest $100M of public money in the Carlyle Group. The firm's magic touch was already bringing results. Today, it is proving as fruitful as ever.

Then in changing a bit the last chuckle:

When the Law is against you, argue the facts.

When the facts are against you, argue the law.

When both are against you, attack the Victim.

And then the punchline is the picture sent: The Ark with all the animals in a sieve of a boat riddled with woodpecker holes with Noah with his butterfly net trying to catch the saboteur. Oh well, Dharma says she can certainly RELATE, body and boat. Do we ever feel like Noah with few ways to actually plug the holes and an insane woodpecker just ahead and out of reach.

Everyone else says: “Hey, that’s the Philippines!” No, that boat represents the world in flood-zone TODAY! Worse yet for the woodpecker, for he can’t stay airborne forever—and—no land in sight.

And just how do the people feel about the State of the Nation this August? Read on from something dropped off for sharing:

[QUOTING POLITICO-ECONOMIC ANALYSIS, Vol. 1, No. 1, August 8, 2002:]

THE DYING GASP OF THE ARROYO REGIME (1)

Author: Anonymous

The regime of President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo is slowly, but surely, entering its thanatose phase, thanks largely to its complete puppetry to U.S. dictates and its false belief that the economy can make a rebound and overturn the expected P200-billion budget deficit this year.

Worse, the regime signed its death warrant by waging war on all its perceived enemies on all fronts, which exacerbates the country’s economic crisis, and shattering the conditions for discussing peace with the National Democratic Front (NDF), the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) and other smaller insurgent forces.

Arroyo has taken upon herself to act as a law enforcer, market vendor, prosecutor and, finally, as a stupid Chief Executive. [H: Well, we can see why “anonymous”.]

In her vain attempt to win public approval, Arroyo has made herself the laughingstock of the entire nation, announcing the premature surrender of Faizal Marohombsar, whom her police generals allowed to escape from jail in Camp Crame.

She also said that a notorious leader of the Abu Sayyaf had been arrested, only to be told that the story came from a polluted source. There was nothing to it, much like the fact that there’s nothing between Arroyo’s ears.

Then, the worst was when she announced before the entire nation that a Land Bank of the Philippines (LBP) cashier was a suspect in a P203-million tax scam. Her poor victim, Acsa Ramirez, could only sob as the stupid President refused to correct a wrong that came from her loquacious mouth. Arroyo does not apologize, for she is infallible as far as the dying Jaime cardinal Sin is concerned. [H: Acsa Ramirez is actually “the” one who turned in the bunch of thieves. She was displayed openly and totally humiliated. Moreover, charges for investigation into her possible participation are ongoing. True? False? Who knows in this “holy boat”.]

In all these episodes, Arroyo was guided by Palace lackeys like Press undersecretary Bobby Capco, whose major achievement in her government was to buy a condominium in Eastwood City, and Norberto Gonzales, the adviser for special concerns, who leads a group of three men who had scuttled the peace deal with the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF).

These embarrassing incidents would not have happened had Arroyo exercised care in her frothing mouth and arrogant tongue, both of which are controlled by her “image” builder, the wash-your-car boy Dante Ang, and stopped babbling in front of cameras. Ang enjoys the monopoly of all PR contracts in government, all ad placements and all crisis management deals.

This image builder of shameful stature is the same architect of the galunggong act, which exposed Arroyo to the worst ridicule of her sorry career. Arroyo, the palengkera boasted that under her regime, the lowly fish sells for only P60 a kilo. The fact is she did not even buy the fish in a Quezon City market. Thanks to Ang, who is also the overlord of sequestered newspapers and TV networks, Arroyo’s popularity hit the pits.

No one revives a dead gimmick, but Ang is necrophiliac, and he will never stop using dead gimmicks to deodorize the rotting Arroyo regime.

The Arroyo regime has been resorting to all these gimmicks to hide the fact that it has been completely inept and incompetent to handle the ship of state. At the rate it is going, Arroyo should even be entrusted with a single strand of rope to stabilize the ship of state.

Behind all these fumbles, Arroyo and her gang have been engaged in the worst plunder of state coffers.

Rene Banez, her quarterback at the Bureau of Internal Revenue (BIR), has hidden 6,000 letters of authority (LAS) to prevent BIR investigators into going after large tax cheats. He was also responsible for the ballooning tax shortfalls, with the amount now rising higher than P40 billion.

Why is Arroyo maintaining Banez?

Banez is the collector for the Arroyo campaign kitty for 2004, and he is also the connection to Manny Pangilinan, whose foundering Ft. Bonifacio property development venture has been exempted from payment of documentary stamp tax (DST) exceeding P1 billion.

He and another collector, Mai Mai Jimenez, are now hard at work in accumulating money to maintain Arroyo in power in the 2004 elections.

Jimenez has the handle on all big-ticket projects and all large releases of funds to government agencies and provincial governments. It is a standard operating procedure (SOP) that she who allows the release of funds from DBM gets a good cut.

Indeed, this regime is gasping for life, and more than 80 percent of the entire people want it to go. Various surveys have shown that this is the sentiment of the nation, but Arroyo does not see the signs of the times, and all because the overgrown brat refuses to grow up politically.

[END OF QUOTING]

Now why would I even use something as banal as is the above? Because it is the general feeling of the entire Philippine nation in preparation for the next WORSE to come.

Just as I wrote above about the position of Fidel Ramos, we must integrate that same party into this realization.

Anyone keeping up with the ongoing daily dramas and spiraling downfall of this nation will KNOW that the plans today are to, if possible, pull off a snap election before Estrada is released and yes indeed, put Fidel Ramos back into the position on the throne. He just about has to do this to keep from going down as the greatest traitor this nation has ever known.

Worse yet, the above copy is mild compared to the nasties in some of the papers which worsen day by day. The lady does seem to be on “self-destruct” but one has to wonder what other choice the “little puppet” has, for it is doubtful that she has the true backbone to leave her handlers and save this nation. Meanwhile the graft and corruption grows increasingly more visible every day that passes.

So, for you who wonder about the Philippines, I have to remind you that too many Filipinos have kissed off all hope. We just heard from South Africa where information was shared and the Filipinos in the National Group gathering, simply shrugged and said it was hopeless. Perhaps it is even worse in South Africa? It is hard to believe, however, for the Filipinos are THERE to work as slaves—er-ah—servants.

Perhaps it is so that in Sodom and Gomorrah there are no longer any “good men” as defined by God on that infamous day of Hell on Earth.

Yes, I certainly do understand the desire to simply sell the corporations we hold, mend our own boats and retire. It is certainly an enticing temptation and one to which we may well have to consider if appropriate. You see, God rules out NOTHING.

May wisdom strike you ever so gently between thine ears.—GCH

Shameful, Sickening Atrocities “Anti-Terrorist” War Crimes

8/24/02—#1 (16-8)

RE: ATROCITIES AND WAR ON TERROR: WHO IS DOING WHAT TO WHOM?

FROM AFGHANISTAN TO THE PHILIPPINES

Hatonn—Starting with the Philippines focus it is far easier to point out that by just that which takes place and passes even on CNN as common knowledge, it is easy to see that the Philippines is but a mouse in the grip of the Lion playing games with the “puppets” of Southeast Asia.

War on Terror? Come now, you who still believe such a fraud are obviously in the worse grips of the Fairy-Tale crowd. THERE ARE NO ATROCITIES BEING COMMITTED BY ANY ACCUSED “TERRORISTS” GREATER THAN BY THE PARTICIPANTS WITH THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS INSTRUCTOR AND DEADLY EXECUTIONER. NONE!

You in the U.S. are doomed to have more mentally stressed “soldiers” turn out of this “non-war” than even succumbed in Vietnam. See what you think of the next offering of witnessed information:

[QUOTING The Daily TRIBUNE, Manila, Philippines, Saturday, August 24, 2002. The article, however, came from NEWSWEEK magazine as a Special Report entitled “The War Crime of Afghanistan”:]

ATROCITIES TO STAMP OUT TERRORISM BACKBENCHER, Rod P. Kapunan

NEWSWEEK magazine in its latest edition came out with a special report entitled, “The War Crime of Afghanistan”. The report came out with gruesome findings by William “Bill” Haglund of atrocities committed by the Northern Alliance headed by its bloodthirsty Gen. Abdul Rashid Dostum. It is disturbing especially for those who have been apprehensive about the presence of U.S. troops in this country (Philippines), and are now probably rethinking on how far we can go in blindly following the bigotry of U.S. President George W. Bush. Haglund, a forensic anthropologist member of the Boston-based Physicians for Human Rights and his team just stumbled into what many have suspected as the usual bloody business to get rid of prisoners. The report could alter the image of the U.S. as victim of that dreaded terrorist attack by the dreaded al-Qaida holed up in that desolate land that barely has a glimpse of the 21st Century.

While the world joined the Americans in condemning the September attack, it is just about to be awakened also by the frightening vengeance of those forces that the U.S. has been cultivating as ally, financing and training militarily in the fight against the Taliban. The mass murder of those captured and surrendered peacefully has, by now, exceeded the dimension of terrorism committed by the hunted group of Osama bin Laden. Although terrorism and the mass murder of prisoners may be haunting to the mind of man, there are differences and one can easily balance the gravity of the crime committed against humanity. Notably, terrorism does not take into account the consequence of their action. However, atrocities by whatever method such as suffocating prisoners, take a much heavier price because there is premeditation by the victor to get rid of his defenseless prisoners by the cold-blooded process of murder. Being the enforcer of the law, the U.S. cannot override terrorism by resorting to its version of savage justice.

The discovery of the atrocities committed by the militia of Dostum came about when Haglund and his team accidentally stumbled on a site known as Dasht-e Leili where scattered human bones surfaced after being scavenged by animals. When the team dug up a trench, it soon realized high density of cadavers buried in a mass graveyard indicating they were thrown into a pit. The area in which they were buried indicates that a bulldozer was used to cover the burial pit, and the stray surgical gloves made Haglund to conclude that there was “a modicum of planning”.

The report stated the atrocities committed by the U.S.-backed Northern Alliance happened between Nov. 20 and Dec. 6, 2001 after the forces of Dostum with the support of the U.S. Special Forces succeeded in choking the Taliban forces in Konduz. After three days of negotiations with assurance of being fairly treated, they surrendered and it took place in Yerganak. From there, the prisoners were transported in an open Russian truck to Mazar-e Sharif. For three to four days, those thousands of prisoners with barely anything to eat waited for their final destination to Sheberghan prison. Surprisingly, what arrived were trucks with their containerized vans. Many had the inkling they would not end up as prisoners, but would be simply sealed to their death. [H: Rather makes the Nazis with a reputation of gassing prisoners look pretty humane, doesn't it?]

Afghans, and a sprinkling of Pakistanis, Arabs and Chechens, were stripped of their turbans, caps and vests, and were herded right into the waiting truck and packed like sardines, as many as 200 per container. As soon as it was fully loaded, it was sealed and driven to Qala Zeini and left for days under the searing heat of the desert Sun. In just a few hours, many of the prisoners died of suffocation and rapid dehydration. As described by NEWSWEEK on how those hapless prisoners agonized to their death, “After nearly 24 hours without water... the prisoners were so desperate with thirst that they began licking the sweat off each other’s bodies. Some prisoners began to lose their reason and started biting those around them... After about eight hours... the prisoners began kicking the sides of the container and shouting for air and water. None came. Some prisoners began using their turbans to soak and drink the sweat off each other’s bodies. After a few more hours many of the prisoners started going crazy and bit each other’s fingertips, arms and legs. Anything to get moisture. By the time they reached Sheberghan... only about 40 in the containers were still alive.”

With that report, nobody knows just how the U.S. could avoid any involvement. During the entire operation, NEWSWEEK gathered that elements of the U.S. Special Forces 595 A-team were closely coordinating with the Northern Alliance troops and were specifically assigned to work with Dostum. They were present during the choking of Konduz, supervising the surrender of prisoners in Yerganak. There were pictures showing Taliban prisoners held inside these containerized death chambers before they were locked up and a picture showing that butcher Dostum having his sumptuous dinner with some of the U.S. Special Forces. NEWSWEEK noted that a CIA operative was even killed when an uprising broke out at the Qala Jangi prison in Mazar-e Sharif, and investigation established, “American forces were working with ‘allies’ who committed what could qualify as war crimes”. In fact, an official of the Red Cross in Geneva has expressed “grave concern” about the treatment of prisoners by U.S. forces and its allies.

With that backdrop, the people are now in a dilemma on how to cope with the same possibility of savagery that can happen here. There is greater fear now because the same degree of war crimes can likely happen in the event that the war against terrorism intensifies in the South. The shadow of unrestrained brutality and genocide is almost visible because of the deepening involvement of U.S. forces that before were simply confined to training exercises. There is anxiety because there are many local warlords in the South with their own militias who have all the characteristics and appetite for blood like that of General Dostum.

The asphyxiation of those prisoners is the common instinct of war criminals as they have always been guided by that barbaric slogan of taking no prisoners alive. By then, the conduct of warfare would be reduced to the bare objective of annihilation without qualification. With the discovery of atrocities, the U.S. has more reasons not to object and the Philippines is an accomplice of its unqualified endorsement of the anti-terrorist campaign. The possibility has been bolstered by the desperate efforts to scour for funds to cover the huge budget deficit. By refusing to ratify the European-sponsored ICC, this country assured itself of a $30-million military assistance. Invariably, it would reduce us to plain mercenaries who would just do anything like granting U.S. forces blanket authority on how to deal with our own people.

[END QUOTING]

Is this above activity actually any worse or better than shooting hundreds of thousands of Iraqis in the back on their disarmed struggle-march back to Baghdad, circa 1991? The U.S. was in charge of THAT war and has vowed to do another show-and-tell romp through those States.

Ah but, not to worry, Israel’s Sharon has stated that if the U.S. chose to do a trick-trip on Saddam, that Israel would be a “good soldier” and support the U.S., his “friend and ally”. Good soldier? Well, I guess so!

In today’s reports there are pictures of Israelis installing anti-missile systems out in that nasty old hot desert called Negev as in “training exercises”—although it is not suspicioned there is any real “need” for such protection.

In the Negev? No need? My goodness, you can't leave half or more of the world's gold and enough nuclear arsenal to blow away the planet, unsheltered—would you?

All that and meanwhile back in Sulu-land of Southern Philippines, the man who headed the Abu Sayyaf and was pronounced “dead” by the U.S., and the Philippine President, GMA, has struck again—living and well. He is an artist at “chopping” heads and showed his expertise just THIS week.

Now, of course, although Sabaya does not have “a brother”, he suddenly today has a TWIN BROTHER who apparently is, as reported, a “spitting image” of Sabaya. Meanwhile those U.S. Special Forces stay right on the job in Basi-Land. Do you ever get a headache, reader?

Ekkers are U.S. citizens and have been basically ordered to house arrest to protect them. From what or whom? Oh, it really is hard to tell isn't it? This is “just because” they are American, no more and no less. The Philippines wants them kept SAFE as does the U.S., generally speaking. But, it is such a drag on TOURISM that the U.S. and allied nations are restricting travel to the Philippines and urging citizens to stay out of here. Some travel restrictions apply to those not even enemies of the U.S.

But, hearken! Front-page headline: “‘Hostile, errant’ travel advisories irk RP” (Republic of the Philippines). And following on: The ‘unfriendly’ and ‘inaccurate’ travel advisories being issued by foreign governments are likely to create a crack in their diplomatic ties with the Philippines.

“This was the warning made by Foreign Affairs Undersecretary for Policy Lauro Raja Jr. yesterday as he urged foreign countries to go easy on their travel bulletins. “He said: ‘If the advisory is inaccurate and phrased in an unfriendly manner, then it might give a wrong impression about the situation in the country and that the state of relations is not good.’”

My goodness, it simply couldn't get much WORSE, tourist.

Without trying to further explain the following few “drop-off” analyses by, we are left to still assume, Domino, we acknowledge they arrived in August 2002 but we don't have exact dates nor specific references. However, they state the general concepts of the majority of citizens in this city called Manila.

[QUOTING “ANALYSIS”, August 2002:]

GENERAL COMMENTS AND OBSERVATIONS ON U.S., JAPAN AND POLITICS

Prior to the end of the Cold War in 1989 when the Berlin Wall came down, the U.S.-based NATIONAL INTEREST magazine invited contributors to a forum to formulate a new foreign policy for an era in which “no great enemy threatened”. Many responded with calls for imposing a “Pax Americana” or “global hegemony” in a world unable to resist the “world's last superpower”.

Columnist Charles Krauthammer proposed to “integrate” the U.S., Europe, and Japan in a “supersovereign” entity that would be “economically, culturally, and politically hegemonic in the world”. The trouble with this globalist vision is that it is utopian. It envisions a world that has never existed and can never exist because it is contrary to fallen human nature.

Today, more and more globalists have discovered that the “international community” is a fiction. America's NATO allies, save Britain, refused to back her in the recent Gulf crisis and have yet to contribute to U.S. efforts to oust Iraq's Saddam Hussein, as part of their contribution to a NATO expansion. Russia sells weapons to anti-U.S. regimes. Israel, beneficiary of billions in U.S. aid, ignores American complaints with regard to arbitrarily taking the West Bank and wishes to keep it. At the same time, Tel Aviv sells advanced weapons, dependent on U.S. technology, to CHINA. The Gulf nations refuse to support the U.S. against Iraq and are moving closer to their Islamic brothers.

Closer to home, the Japanese reject American economic advice, and Japan and China ignore U.S. demands for open markets for American goods. Moreover, U.S. President George W. Bush's provocations to disrupt East Asian ties are being met with rising anger. Foreign Minister Makiko Tanaka called Bush “an asshole”, referring to his many provocations against China and North Korea. Tanaka's criticism of Bush's missile defense program as a provocation and of undue influence on Bush by “oil industry people in Texas”, only shows that Japan cannot be relied upon to support America's petro-politics, despite U.S.-Japan-South Korea security treaties.

The STAR's Max Soliven was right in stating that the Japanese still “have the strongest military establishment in the area”, despite “all that modest Self-Defense Forces labeling”. The truth is, Japan has been quietly stalking China's military spending. Although Japan “is not shy about proclaiming its alliance with the U.S.—and, in fact, subsidizes the existing U.S. bases in their country by contributing U.S.$7 BILLION yearly to their upkeep and maintenance,” things could go the same way it did prior to World War II, when Japan was literally pushed by the Anglo-Americans into Germany's side when she was notified that the United States and Great Britain, through their oil companies, would no longer sell their precious commodities to Tokyo. There is also the untold story about the fabled Yamashita Treasures which, if true, merely affirms the continuing, secret partnership between the Japanese and Germans with regard to war booties. The trouble is, the Philippines got caught by this “golden spider's web” through former President Marcos.

Japan's policymakers are more than inclined to use militarism as an effective tool of foreign policy, now that its political and economic measures are gradually being overshadowed by the Chinese. The country has a lot of financial reserve to boost its armed forces; and the transformation of Japan's defense department into a full-time ministry indicates that the Nippon leadership is ready to introduce amendments to the Constitution, to enable the country to fast-track its military capabilities, especially in the areas south of Japan, i.e., China, Southeast Asia, and the Korean Peninsula.

[END OF QUOTING]

Next let us look at observations regarding that Philippine-China ongoing adversity.

[QUOTING “ANALYSIS”, August 2002, “Domino”:]

PROBLEMS WITH SUCH AS CHINA

Nothing seems to be going President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's (PGMA) way these days. Even her diplomatic offensive is going nowhere. As expected, China for the nth time has rejected a RP proposal for a “code of conduct” that will govern territorial disputes. Despite the support of ASEAN member-states, our diplomats are no match against Beijing's tactic of postponing decisions if the dispute in question is significant but cannot be resolved rapidly to China's advantage by peaceful means.

The same logic has been applied by China to the dispute over Taiwan. The reluctance to employ force to resolve territorial disputes remains a good example of Beijing's calculative strategy at work. But make no mistake about it. “China is seeking to become the dominant power in Asia,” says Bill Gertz of the WASHINGTON TIMES, and the Chinese are convinced, just as the Japanese are, that whoever controls the South China Sea will control the region.

Compounding the Philippines' security problem is the United States' foreign policy of “neither here nor there”, as far as the security of Southeast Asian allies are concerned as expressed by State Secretary Colin Powell. “No U.S. bases, no additional troops” could mean Washington's adherence to the Nixon Doctrine laid down by the president in Guam in 1969, that in future Asian wars, America will provide the weapons of defense for free nations, but Asian soldiers, sailors, and airmen must do the fighting.

American officials say that U.S. policy toward China is neither to aggravate nor to appease Beijing. But allowing China to run close to $60 billion annual trade surpluses at U.S. expense, while guaranteeing low-interest loans to Beijing from the Asian Development Bank and World Bank, is appeasement.

In contrast is America's continuing shabby treatment of the Philippines, a traditional and steadfast ally (or should we say, alalay). From the beginning, the Philippines has always been viewed by American militarists as “a military and diplomatic liability... the Achilles heel of American defense, a hostage for American foreign policy in the Far East.” To them, our islands are impossible to defend without investments of men and money their economic and strategic benefit could not justify.

Even the $55 million aid package dangled by the U.S. for the war against local terrorism, on top of the $100 million already allocated to fight poverty, is part of America's carrot-and-stick approach to lure the Philippine government.

No mention is made regarding RP exports to the U.S., including tuna!

PGMA's political bluff, therefore, is going pfttt. While she threatens the ruling Lakas-NUCD with periodic flirtations with the Liberal Party which political analysts believe is quietly being refurbished by the present dispensation in preparation for 2004, Lakas strategists have come up with a counter-threat of putting up a Roco-Legarda tandem. After all, did not the duo stand out during the Senate impeachment proceedings?

“At the EDSA shrine, Raul Roco and Loren Legarda rode the crest of adulatory waves. I remember at the time there wasn't much enthusiasm for Vice President Arroyo. There were even a few scattered boos when somebody from the stage mentioned her name. Maybe we can look back at those days for lessons and answers on the political paralysis gripping the nation today,” writes the STAR's Teddy Benigno. And the Lakas-NUCD's battery of political analysts must have read his mind even before he wrote the article regarding the Roco factor (STAR, 05 August 2002).

[END OF QUOTING]

Since the ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL just a couple of days ago did such a job on the Philippines and its predicaments self-created, we just offer one last “Analysis” that arrived last evening. Part of the attachments are so blunt and to the point that we have to decline to copy to press. Needless to say, the rabble are roused and gaining war-power by the minute.

[QUOTING “ANALYSIS”, circa August 22, 2002, “Domino”:]

CURRENT SITUATION IN THE PHILIPPINES

The latest edition of the ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL, which carries a four-column article of James Hookway, tells everything one needs to know about the current situation in the Philippines: “Five years ago, the Philippines was hammered by Asia's financial crisis. Now the country risks getting sideswiped by the threats of a similar crunch in Latin America... because Manila faces a widening budget deficit, financed largely by foreign borrowings.”

The AWSJ wants the government to address the problem of “widespread tax evasion”, which “has stretched this year's projected deficit to about 4 percent of the Philippines' gross domestic product—close to 4 percent to 5 percent predicted for Brazil.”

For her part, PGMA insists in pursuing “her rip-roaring roseate roadshow against crime”, declaring that “the best way to catch big fish is to get small fish”, hoping to squeeze more funds from the thieves inside Customs and the BIR (Bureau of Internal Revenue). But even her finance secretary isn't banking on it. Instead, Camacho admitted that it would take no less than a miracle for us to weather the financial storm. The administration's economic managers had banked on an early U.S. economic recovery, but the IMF thinks otherwise. America is on the verge of a relapse into recession, as the 900 days falloff in the market approaches the record of the 1929 Great Depression.

To trim the 2003 budget deficit, government plans to sell more assets to help finance some P15 billion worth of expenditure items not included in the proposed budget. This, however, will not suffice. According to Rep. Tet Garcia of Bataan, government must immediately address the shortfalls in the collection of taxes/duties, diversions and delays/non-remittances by unscrupulous authorized agent banks (AABs) of their collections which could easily exceed P100 billion annually—a problem that has persisted since the early 1980s.

RE: THANK YOU!

BECAUSE DJE WRITES HERE—

It often is construed by our most observant adversaries that somehow DJE singularly tries to run the world. Sorry, I have no such ambitions and even if I would wish such a stupid thing, I'm too old and tired and over that proverbial "hill" (just ask those same adversaries). I can't even make it to the top of the hill, so much the less, over it!

As things settle into another step forward as we passed our 15th year in accounting, as usual the program steps up a notch on the thermostat.

Berends were kind enough to go to California and Nevada and pretty much look over "whatever" and then meet and confer to see how best to attend current theatres of operations.

Even though we have no claim to input or output we are certainly honored that we are included in considerations, especially where there could be any reflection on Diane.

The charges against Diane finally were reduced to simply "mailing" information which was actually created by other parties with qualified credentials. This included a physician, a registered nurse, a chiropractor of long standing, an herbologist with, we were told, a Ph.D. in herbology.

The charges, furthermore, were not against product except to qualify a couple of things as not containing enough particulate as to be "worthless". Example: "There is not enough copper in the gold colloid to meet minimum requirements." THERE SHOULD BE "NO" (0) COPPER IN A GOLD COLLOID.

Another interesting official statement was that there was not enough "gold" in the gold colloid to qualify for minimum daily requirements. The fact that colloidal particulate SHOULD NOT EVEN REGISTER is interesting in itself—but—more interesting, the solution tested was a lovely purple-lavender (the color of a good colloidal solution with gold particles which makes it "the colloidal solution" so named).

The same "problem" existed, as well, with the silver colloid even though it too was a perfect "color" as in "golden".

It must, therefore, be our assumption that the entire raid exercise was just that, an exercise based on nothing except lies presented by people who deliberately wanted to destroy product and persons.

This is not my purpose in this letter, however, but rather to thank you for keeping us informed because the obvious parties in target are we!

The next comment, of course, is that we are pleased others have stepped forward to check around and make available some of the approved products.

Dr. and Mr. Jack Tulanian had always done the catalogs for NGP and that is substantiated by Dr. Tulanian demanding to be removed from any further connection AFTER THE INFAMOUS BREAK-AWAY BY WHAT IS NOW THE SPECTRUM GROUP COMPRISED OF ALL THE FEDERAL AGENT'S INTERVIEWEES.

Please remember, as well, that any "operations" were under management of Margie Berndt—and NEVER "Diane". Moreover, nothing was ever shipped, to our knowledge, from California but from the corporate facilities in Las Vegas. This is true and proven by the raids in Las Vegas and confiscation of products which also have not been returned. Remember that colloids have NO expiration dates, for they are good unless particulate has "fallen-out".

The Drias only forever get simply "better" the longer they are held.

Colloids which are chemically-catalytically colloidalized are equally "permanent" in their holding, unless "fallen-out" with one exception; IF PARTICULATE HAS BEEN MAGNETICALLY DISCHARGED IN A METALLIC SOLUTION—THE PARTICLES WILL SIMPLY "DROP-OUT. Catalytic-CONVERTED solutions are exactly that: new compounds which are "permanently" converted into something different from the original components.

Centrifugally vortexed, as in mineral/vitamin colloidalization, is through centrifugal-electro-magnetic particularization into solution by ionized particulate "flung" into water molecules. The best such solution is simply one ion of desired substance per molecule of the solution. In ALL instances, used in conjunction with "Gaiandriana" as in "trademark" but referring to "drias" come the very best "carry-cells".

Remember that the point of body utilization is cell-to and "within cell" and this is the big bug-a-boo-boo in that most "treatment" drugs CANNOT pass the cell membrane-walls. Drias can and do as do colloidalized-ions, for they are already in the cells.

The best colloidal solution under the Sun would be colloids where the solution itself is actually a dria solution. This would solve the problem of blood transfusions, for the drias in "colloidal" solution (comes that way) provides fluid AND can carry abundant oxygen supply without using dead cells (blood as in transfusion) or plasma.

Enough on this, for we only wished to thank you for your input and help, for I suppose the very act of sitting to this keyboard becomes a focus for our teacher's input. So, I have been in the habit (bad) of saying "I just can't do this!" I now consciously turn that about and repeat three times: "I CAN DO THIS". So, please, friends, if I slip, be patient.

I certainly can't, however, have much input to cleaning up a room or keeping it clean OR even who does anything, right or wrong, 9,000 miles away.

There is "Lucy" in Bakersfield who has been so eager to help in any way, including willing to drop everything and move to Manila. She is, I believe, a registered nurse and the only complaint I ever heard is that she likes to organize things and is Ms. Clean. She might be very willing to give and then get paid later, for both input and assistance on needed days. Then there is also Betty S. although I don't know where she might be at present. Four years is a long time out of touch.

I'm sure John L. could learn everything necessary and DOCUMENT it for reference as to equipment. If you get funds you can also hire some of the "old" workers to fill in. Enough on that because we must stay out of it, for we will

Garcia believes that the biggest single factor that prevents the BIR and Customs from efficiently collecting internal revenue taxes and duties is their "utter lack of a basic management information system (MIS) that will give the actual total amounts they collect as soon as possible, broken down by taxpayer and the kind of tax-duty paid."

Garcia's proposed safeguard measures, however, suffered a major setback after the NBI uncovered a conspiracy involving Land Bank officials to launder P203 million. Worse, the supposed "whistleblower", Acsa Ramirez, is turning out to be a conspirer, per testimony of branch manager Artemio San Juan.

According to the tumor mill, the collusion between bank officials and syndicates goes up to the top officials. Land Bank prexy Margarito Teves, who now finds himself in the same predicament as that of resigned Education Secretary Raul Roco. The only difference, they say, is that Roco refused to cooperate with the DepEd 'mafia' while Teves seems to "tow the line".

Some say that the same could hold true in the case of newly-resigned BIR Commissioner Rene Banez, who is viewed as a "reformer" by the Makati Business Club. His detractors, however, insist that Banez is the 'collector' for the Arroyo campaign fund for 2004, withholding about 6,000 letters of authority (Las) to prevent BIR probers to go after big-time tax cheats, resulting in the ballooning tax shortfalls reported to be in the vicinity of P40 billion.

All this gives credence to the proposed creation of the Internal Revenue Management Authority (IRMA), the key to transforming the BIR into a more effective tax collection agency. It transforms the government agency into a quasi-corporation with its senior officers tied to performance-based management contracts.

Meanwhile, IMF officials have decided to delay for at least a year the process of "naming and shaming" nations acting as centers for global money laundering. The move, which practically gives the Arroyo administration a "grace period" to straighten out the financial mess it is in, is seen as a prelude to the abolition of the Paris-based Financial Action Task Force (PATF). In short, Big Brother wants to take full control of monitoring movements of money, especially in the areas where banks act as clearing houses and money launderers of drug money, among others.

During the Marcos era, Big Brother controlled money movements through control of the world's central banks and/or monetary boards. Today, the control becomes even more rigid as big name banks like the Federal Reserve Banks, Bank of International Settlements (BIS), World Bank, Hong-Sheng, American Express, etc., are likewise commissioned to closely watch means of recycling drug dollars. Each of these banks is affiliated with and/or controls hundreds of thousands of large and small banks throughout the world.

[END OF QUOTING]

My intent is not to bore any of our readers regarding things which relate only to the Philippines. I remind you that the Philippines is A REFLECTION OF U.S. activities. This is not just a bunch of islands in Paradise—it is the most strategic location in Asia at the moment. It also reflects, again through the United States, THE MOST DEVASTATING OF STEPS TOWARD GLOBAL ECONOMIC DISASTER.

However, I believe that we might leave this to your ponderings as we confront the piles of entropy about to bury everything that "used to be" in sight.

I am quite eager, in fact, to get back to the topic of Lt. Col. Al Martin's escapades in the team of one George Bush. Certainly things just never get dull on Planet Earth, do they? You are known in the Cosmos identification code as "Shan". I begin to believe that might better be "Scam or Sham. The Games never cease.

Salu, GCH

not jeopardize our position for any OTHER sort of distraction. THIS is our job until further assignment.

This nation is in such trouble in every direction and today there are more “hostages” which also is perpetrated by the Dead Man, Sabaya it is said, and this time they wasted no time in beheading two Jehovah’s Witnesses and putting away four door-to-door sellers of tea and Avon products. This is down in “Dangerville” but moving about is totally restricted with us being warned by the U.S. as well as local intelligence.

A couple of things (possibilities) which had gone quite silent are back in the “churning” stage so again we have hope for some realization of something from a couple of things we had literally discarded as being no longer valid. We have as much trouble as anyone in sorting drama figments from any relative reality.

With all the gold supposed to be under every bed and hundreds (literally) of tons up for sale—we have yet to see more than an ounce and the person was a fraud using it as a “come-on”.

So, what of our “program”? Oh my, we only need deal with what is supposed to be in THAT CENTRAL BANK. At some point the culprits HAVE TO FACE what has happened to that gold—AND GET IT BACK. And THAT is why it has taken four years and more—worthless dollars and missing gold, especially in derivatives.

Our German associate, however, is having problems with the Immigration Dept. so we have to rearrange the “Tallano estate” interchanges. That can be worked out through other “agents” and legal counsel so shouldn’t cause much time waste—except that Struck is such a go-getter that anything lesser seems “still in the water”. We are confident his problems can be resolved although our own observations in this particular arena are that he would be as, or moreso, valuable in Germany as here in “The most disaster-prone place on the glob (globe)” as labeled by the international humanitarian associations (Red Cross-Red Crescent). I BELIEVE IT! Unfortunately, the biggest disaster of all is the population itself. So be it, in the words of the Teacher.

The best news of ALL, however, just came as an interruption by a phone call from down South in which our program was being discussed and through which “they” are trying to get us over to Malaysia in the near future, etc. People had been here a lot lately who are working with Malaysia but belong in the Philippines. Wisdom presents that that is enough explanation. However, the person in “lead” just happened to mention to our caller that they had literally been to the World Bank here, met and conferred and a person at the Bank who said our program is valid and will be in use but it will take up to a year to put into utilization. Now, people, the World Bank! That is not shabbyville.

As is usual, “The wife is the last to know!” In other words, nobody told us, including Dad.

One other person back in the picture as of yesterday and who was working with a former Supreme Court Justice, is again visiting and saying that it is moving well and “he” wants to handle it and handle it properly—so his representative is supposed to call for a “conference”-type meeting today—or next week, or whenever Philippine time presents.

Who knows? Certainly NOT us! We can only take the balls as pitched and try for a hit while having both hands tied behind us and being blind as bats in a screened room.

By the way, supposing the World Bank statement is true, we hurt, still, for that year in passage so we have to keep padding and patching the boat until the port is located.

Our own realization is that “holdup” is due to political factors here in Manila. Can’t say what the overall problems might be but let’s be assured that the political turnover here is both anticipated and all but unavoidable—AGAIN.

Boy, the Bush Boys have done a number on these people over here. They promised oodles of $$$ and have cut it to almost nothing. They did the Sabaya story and drama which didn’t happen and hung the President here out to dry. Two delivered bloody heads sealed the drama yesterday. Now the game is preventative installations to counter missile attacks. Say what? Rumsfeld yet! And how just safe do YOU feel? Gosh, I guess we were totally blind and stupid while there in Tehachapi and we knew the devil was after us. We just didn’t recognize their identities.

The best of worlds, in my SINGULAR opinion, would be a way to work within the system as is but without the graft and corruption. We certainly cannot run such a massive program, at least “I” certainly have no wish to even try. E.J. doesn’t share that “give-up” attitude but I’m tired of battling Satan nose to nose every minute of my physical manifestation here on this orb.

I’m also sure, however, that Pablo and his “family” can easily remember that while we were there they had it quite good from time to time and we went to bat for him/them every time necessary. Moreover, when things return to normal, (whatever that is), they will benefit most greatly as was always the promise. Their troubles came from Ences, Bilgers, Martin, Irwin, Ward, etc.

I don’t understand traitors, especially to God’s causes, any better than anyone else can, BUT I do know that God’s delays are NOT God’s denials—ever, UNLESS, of course, the intent is evil in the first place. Neither do I understand an observation of something untoward without a willingness to “right” the circumstance. Again, if things went to hell, then some angels must have been “off-duty”.

I find it further interesting that anyone would question why we might not just open our very lives to people who claim to “just want to help”. Does anyone remember Rex Smith? How about Charles Neil?

Charles, on the day before he left Manila with Rick, said to us that “Everyone in the world might leave you guys BUT I WILL ALWAYS BE RIGHT THERE WITH YOU!” Furthermore he CLAIMED he was going back early specifically to “KEEP AN EYE ON RICK”! Charles also seemed to be the investigator of anyone passing through our space and it was sometimes a very uncomfortable outcome.

PRODUCTS AND JOURNALS

None of our products were subject to FDA “ban” but some needed relabeling. I suggest that no one should try to outdo whatever was basic product for, as with Rex, we asked for very specific things over here and he “saved shipping cost” by doing his own preferred MIX. This is not acceptable in any circumstance. The original PRODUCTS were exactly correct and any tampering to suit individuals is unacceptable.

This does not mean people can’t bring forth their own products or enhanced products but NOT WHERE “ANOTHER” IS HELD RESPONSIBLE.

As far as putting herbs of any kind near the Gaiandriana, please know that it will be the herbs which are enhanced—not the drias. In fact, all the metallic colloids were “finished” by 12-24 hours proximity to the dria containers. The input to the colloids of higher frequency was just as effective at night as in sunlight.

As to mice in the woodwork, we note that mice go wherever they choose until shown otherwise. Mr. Turner always used CATS—lots of cats. Are they better than the mice? Infinitely!

So, back to the original purpose of this particular letter; THANK YOU.

Things back there might not ACTUALLY or LITERALLY be our responsibility but when it is assumed, somehow, otherwise, it works out the same—we have to answer for things of which we didn’t even know there was a question.

WE MUST ATTEND “THIS” JOB, FOR THERE ISN’T ANYONE TO FILL IN HERE, YET. NOW IT REQUIRES OTHERS JUST AS BUSY AS ARE WE TO HAVE TO “CATCH-UP” AND BASICALLY START OVER.

If nothing else, it is well admitted that we are KNOWN (about) by everybody, even in the highest circles. They know that what we have is good and also substantial but must also decide how best to go about utilization. The fear is always that with bringing something into full disclosure, as we demand, that other past indiscretions will be uncovered.

That is unnecessary but perhaps likely as opponents choose up wars against one another.

We just got a second warning right off the pages of today’s paper to all U.S. citizens from traveling to this destination or from going to the area of Mt. Pinatubo. Really good for tourism, isn’t it? We are just asked to stay put. So what else is new today?

E.J. took me across the street, literally, for lunch on the 17th (New Year’s) and that was “it” for my bi-monthly trip across the street. Right now our passports are being “visa extended” so we couldn’t go anywhere if we wanted to. That comes around every 60 days which seems every other day.

The U.S. Embassy people, however, even added an additional set of pages to our passports so we can continue to use the extensions. We are NOT in trouble here in spite of the wishes of such as V.K., et al.

A smart-ass at the Central Bank, however, said to a group of “our” friends at last visit that we were bothersome as we just “send in everybody” and somehow we were called “anti-semitic”. That cooled it when the people (just clients), turned on them with the definition of “Semites”. So, yes indeed, we get to have a little vicarious fun from time to time. I wonder if it could be the recent revelation that the Zionist Elite now own and control the Central Bank?

I gather Mr. Bush is, however, having some problems with his old partners in crime, the International Banking Cartel. Ah yes, the Cartel vs. the Cabal. (Sounds like fun!)

Isn’t it strange that in fact these big buzzards aren’t actually giving us much overt trouble while the nasties are from those who proclaimed to BE OUR BEST FRIENDS!?! THESE are the hardest of all realizations and then when it slaps you in the face from Federal agent interviews that those you treated AS YOUR FAMILY lied and cheated, it IS very definitely disappointing.

Can we handle it? In my new stance of “I can handle this!” Yes we can. There is no way to express our appreciation for each and every one of you but will not mention names to avoid the harassment in backwash.

In love and prayers constantly, for Light and wisdom, E-E

THE RULE OF LAW IS AN OLD,
RELEVANT AND VALUABLE STORY

By M. Cherif Bassiouni, Tribune, 08/11/02

M. Cherif Bassiouni is a professor of law and president of the International Human Rights Law Institute at DePaul University.

On March 5, 1770, British Capt. Thomas Preston, facing an angry crowd in Boston near the Custom House, ordered his soldiers to open fire. Several men died. Thus began the Boston uprising against King George III's rule, which led to the colonies' war, and the independence of the United States of America.

These were fiery days in which passions ran deep and during which the fate of the American Revolution was uncertain.

The citizenry called for the trial of Preston. For many, it was a foregone conclusion that he would be found guilty and hanged. Some advocated outright lynching—why bother with a trial? But a few, including John Adams (who later became president), were adamantly opposed to anything but a fair trial. He assumed Preston's defense at the trial before a jury of twelve unsympathetic Bostonians. The courtroom was always filled with an angry crowd for whom the conviction of Preston was to be a symbol of England's condemnation.

Preston's trial for manslaughter thus became the arena for competing values of liberty versus the rule of law. Those who aspired to independence wanted to make this the trial of England. But those who, like Adams, believed in the rule of law thought that liberty would have to be gained on the foundation of the rule of law, and not on its grave.

The atmosphere of the trial was at times rowdy, but no one interfered with the defense or its ability to cross-examine witnesses for the prosecution and present those on its own behalf. Adams remained respected by even the more ardent patriots throughout the trial—and thereafter, as is evidenced by his election to the presidency.

No one questioned his patriotism because he defended an enemy to uphold the rule of law. The prosecution in turn did not use the emotionally charged situation to abuse its prerogatives. There was no secret evidence, no incommunicado detention of Preston, who was also not subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment, and there was no public intimidation of the judge or the jury. In the end, notwithstanding the prevailing climate amid what Bostonians considered the most heinous crime in their history, the jury acquitted Preston of manslaughter.

In his closing statement, Adams reminded the jury that justice was more important than vengeance, and that the American people would be judged by others and by history on the outcome of this simple trial.

And so it was that America was judged for more than 200 years as the champion of liberty and justice through the rule of law. For two centuries the U.S. propagated its spirit and substance, inspiring international human-rights treaties and the constitutions of many countries. Our Supreme Court decisions on civil rights and the protection of the rights of the accused were admired worldwide and followed by many foreign courts.

We judged others by these standards and passed legislation requiring the State Department to issue annual country reports on the state of human rights around the world. We did not hesitate to condemn countries that violated our standards, which we had made into international standards. We accused dictatorial regimes, such as the USSR and its satellites, of breaking international law when they held closed-door trials, disallowed the right to counsel, used secret evidence, kept people incommunicado, mistreated prisoners, and held people for prolonged periods in jail without charges.

For almost 50 years, the U.S. denounced these practices by abusive governments.

Suddenly in the aftermath of Sept. 11, we did much of what we condemned for so long.

In one fell swoop, we did away with the legacy of Preston's trial, the principled position of Adams, the eloquent words of Thomas Jefferson embodied in the Declaration of Independence. We have ignored our Constitution, reversed over 200 years of established rule of law and overlooked our admonitions to others to abide by the same.

We detain prisoners of war in violation of international humanitarian law, which we have made part of our own law. This is the fate of Taliban combatants from Afghanistan, now held in Cuba on a U.S. military base without trial. They are forced to wear goggles and deprived of being able to hear. Such sensory deprivation and other methods are a form of psychological torture in violation of our law and international law. If American POWs were held under the same detention conditions, we would loudly protest these to be inhuman and degrading.

We also allow secret evidence in trials against permanent residents and other immigrants, one of the patently unfair practices characteristic of the most repressive regimes.

Citizens, permanent residents and other immigrants in the U.S. can, in clear violation of the Constitution, be arrested and imprisoned on a presidential finding without being criminally charged, denied their right to counsel, denied their right to cross-examine witnesses, and tried by a secret military commission. All of this is most abhorrent to the Constitution we profess to cherish, and all of this for the trials of Lindh and Padilla, who are U.S. citizens?

Maybe it is time for the administration to be reminded by judges and lawyers, civic-minded citizens and the media, of our Constitution and of our historically principled positions.

The words of Benjamin Franklin inscribed on the Statue of Liberty are more eloquent today than ever: "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety."

WE HAVE THE POWER TO SAY "NO!" NOW

By Linda O'Brien, Online Journal, 08/01/02

There are so many of us who know, in spite of the skewed polls, the fear mongering, the slanted reports, the lack of support from Congress, and the refusal of the media to question. All of it is meant to deny us the power of knowing. But the amazing thing is, we know anyway.

It's been greatly helped by the Internet, but that doesn't entirely explain it. Ask a tentative, "What do you think about what's going on in the country," and you'll probably find you're surrounded by people who are outraged. For many the knowing started on September 11 itself, where it sat in the gut like a stone and could serve no purpose, since it couldn't be shared or verified, but could only raise nausea and make us feel isolated and despairing. The power we have, unspoken, not even needing words to share it with each other, is evident. The implications are enormous.

So why, why, are we letting George W. Bush prepare to do the unthinkable and unnecessary in Iraq?

From all sides, experts say that there are better ways to deal with the potential danger of Hussein. There's a total absence of present threat from him, far less from his people. But many thousands of them will die in any form of this war Bush is pushing, whether it involves "precision" bombing or 200,000 troops. For the first time, the only rationale we'll have for their deaths is our fear of a possibility. Blind yourself, the seduction goes, and I'll save you from your greatest fears. Surely there's a sickening dissonance inside us at the distance between the facts and this relentless push for war. But many appear willing to wait and see, the fear of another deadly assault just edging out the knowledge that this war is desperately immoral. If we continue, the trade-off will be that thousands more innocents will die. Then perhaps the sickness will rise to our throats, and we'll have to own up to what we're now refusing to know.

We've placed a lot of sacrifices on the altar to fear lately. Over two centuries of freedom from snooping and paranoia. The lives of hundreds of immigrants locked up in secret for months. The privacy and peace of mind of thousands of others rounded up and questioned by authorities with initials for names who don't have to give a reason. The deaths of hundreds of Afghan civilians. This particular god is very hungry, insatiable.

It's been said that Bush is acting as if he doesn't need the approval of Congress, or our allies, or of us. And it's true, he doesn't, as long as we keep giving our power to him. It's a classic setup: a frightening event, power handed to one who seems able to save us, and the possibility of other frightening events are held continually over our heads until power becomes abuse of power. The abuser seems much more powerful than he is, all out of proportion to reality, and we come to believe we're powerless, feeding the cycle of increasing abuse, until, desperate and exhausted, we face the worst fear: that no one's going to save us but us.

The worst of what has been done since 9/11 has been to try to deny us knowledge, and it has failed miserably. If, as some fear, something devastating happens to provide a convincing rationale for war on Iraq this fall, many, perhaps most of us are going to be looking past the great and terrifying face on the screen to the man frantically pulling levers behind a curtain. It would be good to make that clear right now.

We were thrust into the mythical hero's journey on September 11. The way out, the hero discovers, is always in rediscovering the power that was always there. This may be the knowledge we must turn and look upon: that we've become too afraid of our own government to challenge what it is doing. We know now. We do. It is done and will be done in our name. We must own it now, and say no.

[JR: Both writers of the these articles speak with a conscience that is inspired by the soul. Americans want PEACE with Iraq because the deaths of innocent Iraqis will diminish us all!]

NEWSPAPERS SHOULD OFFER
JUST THE FACTS, PLEASE

By Binnie Jacover, Tribune, 08/15/02

Flossmoor—As a young girl, before television in the late '40s, newspapers were my joy. They were also my lifeline to the outside world.

I'd "see" the world, so to speak, by way of the morning paper. Faraway places came to my parents' door. I'd read about the who, what, where, when and why, and fill in the rest with my imagination.

My senior-citizen nostalgia aside, I believe newspapers aren't what they used to be. Somewhat mimicking society at large, today newspapers are quite self-absorbed. They are less about news and more about feelings and commentary.

Quite regularly they also unwittingly promote the exception as the rule, or at least as a false trend.

Instead of news, the paper is littered with personal reflections by numerous columnists.

Don't get me wrong; by and large, they are fine writers, but many seem more like frustrated novelists than news reporters. ...

More troubling than the columns is what passes as straight news nowadays. Instead of reporting simple facts, reporters seem to have a desire to tell stories. It is subtle and difficult to explain. Every news story comes with a human-interest angle. Though such angles seem noble and telling, they often serve to distract from the story at large.

Actually nowadays the angles are often the story, and the real news, which should include a degree of history and context, is secondary. ...

Yes, nuance is, of course, a part of news reporting, but it is not the story. The tail doesn't wag the dog.

Every absurd position and opinion seems to be given equal weight, which actually runs counter to news reporting if for no other reason than it connotes a false sense of evenly divided opinion, thought and merit. ...

Perhaps one explanation is that young reporters feel a need to distinguish themselves. When will writers realize they are not the story? Why do so few recognize that there is an inherent majesty in letting the facts speak for themselves? Of course, this requires first knowing the facts.

In retrospect, I suppose in my lifetime reporting has shifted from a staid just-the-facts approach to the current storytelling approach. If that is evolution, then I am a dinosaur. At a minimum, there should be a happy medium.

Naively, I long for the days of straight reporting. In the meantime, I'll keep my almanac close by.

[JR: These are the thoughts and comments from a Chicago reader who has noticed the change of style in the reporting of the "news". The printed pages are short on the facts and long on the spin.]

KURD CHIEF LEAVES HOLE IN IRAQI DISSIDENT UNITY

By Patrick E. Tyler, New York Times, 08/05/02

WASHINGTON—The most powerful Kurdish chieftain in northern Iraq, Massoud Barzani, refused the Bush administration's invitation to attend the meeting of Iraqi opposition figures at the White House last week, Kurdish and administration officials said Wednesday.

The absence of Barzani, whose father, Mustafa Barzani, led the largest Kurdish rebellion of the last century and died in exile in the United States, was a blow to administration officials who had orchestrated the gathering in part to demonstrate that Iraqi opposition forces were unified behind a new campaign to oust Saddam Hussein.

In a feverish effort to entice Barzani to leave northern Iraq and travel to Washington, the administration offered to send a private plane to southeastern Turkey to pick him up, said Kurdish and American officials.

As an additional inducement, U.S. officials said that if Barzani would travel with his longtime rival, Jalal Talabani, on an American aircraft, it was likely the two Kurdish leaders would be treated to a meeting with President Bush. In the end, Talabani came by himself and the conference host was Vice President Dick Cheney on video link from Wyoming.

"Barzani really more so than anyone is the elder statesman of the Iraqi opposition, and we did try to arrange for him to be here and obviously we did not succeed," an administration official said.

Barzani's decision to stay in Iraq indicates that a crisis may be looming with Turkey, administration officials said. Turkish officials, in meetings with senior Bush administration officials and with Kurdish leaders, have warned they are prepared to go to war to prevent the Iraqi Kurds from declaring a Kurdish mini-state within Iraq.

The Turkish government fears that such a state with control over key oil resources around Kirkuk might incite Turkey's repressed Kurdish population to rebel.

Instead of flying to Washington, Barzani sent a representative to tell the Bush administration that it had failed to follow up on a number of promises made last April when Barzani was spirited into the United States for a meeting with top CIA, Pentagon and State Department officials.

Chief among the broken promises, he said, was the United States' failure to address the possibility that Hussein might launch a pre-emptive strike on the Kurds before the administration had built up its forces in the region.

Barzani has about 70,000 fighters under his control. [JR: The Kurds in Afghanistan are having their own problems with Turkey and less with Saddam who is confined to Baghdad. The U.S. will rely on the Turks to crush any attempts made by the Kurds to gain control of the region that contains the oil fields. Turkey also covets those oil fields as well, so we may have a dilemma as to her loyalty as an ally. The deceivers in D.C. failed in their attempts to play up to the vanities of the Kurdish leader with its ploys of private jets and hints of a possible meeting with Bush. The Bush Administration failure to honor its agreements and commitments is what sabotaged its plans to forge an alliance with the powerful Kurd leader, Massoud Barzani. In his case such allures and enticements just didn't work.]

U.S. FAULTS PACE OF AID TO AFGHANS

By Eric Schmitt, New York Times, 08/16/02

WASHINGTON—Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld expressed frustration Thursday at the slow pace of building viable government institutions in Afghanistan, largely blaming other nations for a lag in international donations.

Although foreign governments have pledged more than $4.5 billion in aid over five years to rebuild the country, little of the money has arrived and much of it has strings attached that stop the money from being spent on Afghan security forces, he said.

"The money has not been coming in as fast as it needs to come in," Rumsfeld said.

So far, he said, only a third of the money pledged for this year during a meeting in Tokyo in January has been delivered. And many of those donations are spread out over several years; many involve delivery of goods and services, rather than badly needed cash.

The United States pledged $297 million for the current year but has actually contributed $450 million for humanitarian and reconstruction assistance, the State Department said.

Rumsfeld's comments were noteworthy because numerous allies as well as the Afghans themselves have been urging the U.S. to take on a greater role in providing security around Afghanistan, something the Bush administration opposes. His remarks turned the argument back on some of those countries which, he said, had failed to fulfill their own obligations.

"The problem, in my view, in Afghanistan is not security," Rumsfeld said. "It is, rather, the challenge of bolstering the new government, the new central government, and the fact that the international community is not yet delivering the level of assistance to President [Hamid] Karzai and his team that is needed."

He said the new government has appointed ministers but has no other bureaucratic structures or budget in place. "They need to get on their feet," Rumsfeld said at a Pentagon news conference. "To do that, they need resources."

Rumsfeld's comments, including an opening statement that highlighted many of the humanitarian works that United States and coalition forces have carried out in the country, took aim at critics who say the U.S.-led military operation in Afghanistan has failed to provide the security environment needed to allow new civil institutions to flourish.

Critics have pointed to sporadic bombings, assassinations and Karzai's need for U.S. Special Forces members to serve as bodyguards.

Even so, Rumsfeld said, the security situation is "reasonably good" except for the region between Kabul and the Pakistani border, where there has been fighting.

[JR: Could it be that those nations that pledged their support want it to solely to go to aid, feed and shelter the displaced people of Afghanistan and to rebuild their destroyed towns and villages? The devastation and the needs have to be way beyond the $450M the U.S. has allocated. Part of that U.S. aid money went to build the roads and the military bases to establish a presence in the southern regions. Despite the doublespeak by Rumsfeld, the issue here is definitely about security. The U.S. must fortify its power base in Kabul in order to secure our future oil projects and to quickly diffuse the hostilities growing among the rival tribal factions. The nations who pledged their support may not see the necessity to help further U.S. interests in the region. Maybe they have plans of their own?]

AFGHAN WARLORD THREATENS GOVERNMENT

By Liz Sly, Tribune, 08/06/02

USMANI, Afghanistan—From his military base perched high in the dusty brown mountains of eastern Afghanistan, a leading U.S. ally in the hunt for al-Qaida is threatening rebellion against the Washington-backed government of President Hamid Karzai.

Pashtun tribal leader Padcha Khan Zadran says he has many grievances against Karzai, but the biggest is Karzai's refusal to put him in charge of the three provinces of southeastern Afghanistan.

"I was the commander of southeastern Afghanistan but then Karzai appointed someone else," Zadran says, as he reclines beneath the shade of a large tree, surrounded by his armed guards. "This makes him the biggest criminal in all Afghanistan."

Zadran is threatening to wage war in order to win back the power he feels is his due because he helped drive the Taliban out of the area. In recent days, his supporters have blocked the main road between the eastern Afghan cities of Gardez and Khost. ...

In Kabul, Karzai's government is losing patience. In a statement read Monday on national television, the government issued a warning to Zadran to accept the authority of government officials or face the consequences. It called Zadran and his men a "group of bandits" and warned that Karzai might be "forced to take any actions deemed necessary to keep the peace and stability."

But Zadran remains defiant.

"Karzai can't fight me," he said. "He has no army, no supporters."

Zadran has emerged as one of the most problematic of the many regional warlords whose ambitions and ancient rivalries present the biggest challenge to Karzai's administration as it struggles to consolidate Afghanistan's fragile peace.

What sets Zadran apart from other disgruntled warlords, however, is that he has, at least until recently, enjoyed a close relationship with the U.S. military as one of its leading allies in the hunt for al-Qaida. The 600 Afghan fighters working alongside American soldiers based in the eastern town of Khost are Zadran's men, commanded by his younger brother, Kamal Khan Zadran.

Kamal Khan has refused to vacate the governor's mansion in Khost to make way for Karzai's appointee, and last week he was fired by the government, further complicating the hunt for al-Qaida in the area.

The older Zadran insists his opposition to Karzai does not threaten his ties with the U.S.

"Just because I am against Karzai doesn't mean I am against the Americans," he said. "It is true America supports Karzai, but in the long term that will create a problem for them."

But the complication underscores the difficulties facing U.S. forces tracking remnants of al-Qaida in a region plagued by long-standing tribal rivalries.

Afghan government officials describe the U.S. decision to link up with Zadran last fall as one of its biggest mistakes in the war in Afghanistan.

"All Pashtun tribesmen are ashamed of him, and they can't understand why America did this," Dalili said.

Zadran, an illiterate former truck driver who achieved warlord status while fighting the Soviet occupation, claims that 90 percent of those in the area back him. Those who do not "are friends . . . of al-Qaida and the Taliban," he says.

But in Gardez, it is impossible to find anyone who admits to backing Zadran. Locals say they remember his reign of terror over their city during the mujahedeen government that took over from the communists in 1992, and say they will never accept him back. . . .

But tribal elders in the area refused to accept Zadran's authority, citing his past behavior. Shortly after the Taliban fell, several elders recall, Zadran visited them and warned he would use his influence with U.S. forces to call in air strikes against them unless they agreed to accept his sovereignty in the area. Some claim he has deliberately misled U.S. forces into attacking his tribal rivals by accusing them of helping al-Qaida, a charge Zadran denies. In January, Zadran's forces attacked the city of Gardez, killing around 50 people, in a failed attempt to seize the governorship there. In March, his forces were back in action, fighting alongside U.S. troops in Operation Anaconda in the Shah-e-Kot Valley near Gardez.

Zadran still maintains contact with U.S. forces, though the relationship has clearly been strained in recent months.

"I would neither describe it as close nor distant," he said. "It is a relationship."

The last time he met with U.S. forces was two weeks ago, he said.

"I warned them to stay out of Afghanistan's internal affairs," he said. "I told them not to interfere in tribal matters and to concentrate only on the hunt for al-Qaida."

U.S. officials refuse to comment on their relationships with Afghan figures, although in private conversations military officials have acknowledged that their alliance with Zadran was a mistake. Military experts doubt he can pose a serious threat to the Karzai regime. . . .

But his forces control the main highway between Khost and Gardez, a major trading route linking the region to Pakistan, and his mountain base would be difficult to attack.

Zadran says he does not aspire to overthrow Karzai in Kabul, only to replace the officials Karzai has appointed in the southeast. "The result will be that Karzai will be in Kabul and I will have my own government here," he says. [JR: Zadran poses as a conundrum not only for the U.S. but also for Karzai who is trying to keep things together in Kabul. Zadran is a warlord who has elevated himself to be ruler in the southeast and controller of the trade routes in that region. He has the confidence and the arrogance to defy anyone who would dare prove otherwise. The U.S. military's job is to secure the area for future oil development so we may have to stroke Zadran's imagined, "invincible warrior image" with bribes or weapons, and if that fails we may have to arrange for him to become a casualty in one of our misdirected air strikes.]

MUGABE INSISTS 'DEADLINE STANDS'

Tribune, 08/13/02

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe—President Robert Mugabe insisted Monday that "the deadline stands" for 2,900 of the country's embattled White farmers to leave their land, and that the transfer of their property for Black resettlement would be completed by the end of August.

"We set ourselves an August deadline for the redistribution of land and that deadline stands," Mugabe told supporters Monday in a nationally televised speech.

About 60 percent of the targeted farmers, whose property is earmarked for takeover without compensation, have so far refused to leave their land. They had hoped that Zimbabwe's government, faced with a severe food shortage that threatens half of the nation's 12 million people, might back down on the planned seizures.

But Mugabe insisted Monday that he wants new Black farmers on the land by October, when the annual rains traditionally begin and the spring planting season arrives.

"We, the principled people of Zimbabwe, we, the true owners of this land, shall not budge," he said. "We shall not be deterred on this one vital issue, the land. The land is ours."

Government-backed youth militias moved into place around some targeted White farms last Thursday night, as the government's deadline for the farmers to forfeit their land passed, but Mugabe's government so far has not moved to forcibly seize the properties.

The farmers' refusal to leave appeared to surprise the government, and ruling party workers in Bulawayo suggested Monday that the government might give the White landowners a grace period of a few days to comply before moving in to evict at least some of them.

Joseph Made, the minister of lands, agriculture and rural resettlement, told the government-allied Chronicle newspaper that his department would begin on Monday sending officers out to targeted farms across the country to check compliance with the deadline.

"We have deployed the officers to check on the farmers. Commercial farmers who choose to remain on the farms should know that the government would not hesitate to apply the law," he warned.

Neither he nor Mugabe gave any indication of when forced evictions might start.

"The laws are very clear and if the commercial farmers think that it is a joke, they would have themselves to blame because they were given enough time to wind up their activities," Made said.

Mugabe also said that he would still be willing to do business with White farmers who cooperate with his government.

"All genuine and well-meaning White farmers who wish to pursue a farming career as loyal citizens of this country will have land to do so," he said.

Justice for Agriculture, a newly formed splinter group of the White-dominated Commercial Farmers Union, has in recent days urged its members to thoroughly document the buildings, animals, equipment and other valuables on their targeted farms, in hopes of eventually launching a class-action lawsuit if the government goes ahead with seizures without compensation.

The organization, in a statement Monday, said farmers consider the order to vacate their property illegal and intend to continue fighting it in court. The group also criticized the government for failing to hand over land titles to Black settlers given plots on the seized land.

Government officials, while insisting White land is needed to resettle landless Black farmers and to correct colonial-era land injustices, have themselves seized many of the best farms for their personal use, and the government holds title to all the seized land so far.

"It is regrettable that the opportunity to restore the rule of law and establish proper planning and sustainability to the inevitable process of land reform has not yet been addressed and this is endangering the lives and livelihood of millions of Zimbabweans," the farmers group warned in its statement.

Since government-supported settler invasions of White farms began in February 2000, more than 1,000 of Zimbabwe's approximately 4,500 White farmers have abandoned their properties. Production has plunged at most of the remaining farms because settlers and the government have forbidden the owners from working their fields.

Attacks by liberation-era war veterans and youth militias on targeted White farms have claimed the lives of dozens of farmworkers and 11 White farmers. The country's remaining White farmers still hold title to somewhat under a third of the best farmland in the country, though many have offered to give up large shares of the property to meet government demand for resettlement land.

Made insisted in the interview published Monday that "most of these farmers used to have a number of farms and what we have done is to acquire some of the farms and they have been left with one."

But farmers interviewed throughout the country said they had for the most part already given up their secondary farms, and that the current seizure orders targeted their home farms, leaving them with no other land or property.

[JR: The UN has stated that the threat of famine in Zimbabwe is due to drought conditions, as well as the stand-off between the government and the White farm owners. The Mugabe autocratic form of government has created economic chaos and has increased the occurrences of political violence. The events in Zimbabwe are similar to the events that took place in Kenya in the '50s, when Jomo Kenyatta lead the Kikuyu tribe in what was called the Mau Mau rebellion against European settlers. Mugabe is, for now, using political coercion to confiscate the lands held by White farmers. When the deadline of the ultimatum passes, let us hope that the bloody history of Kenya doesn't repeat itself in Zimbabwe.]

BORDER FINGERPRINTING SET TO BEGIN SEPT. 11

Daily News, 08/13/02

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department has chosen Sept. 11 as the starting date for a new program that will require tens of thousands of foreign visitors to be fingerprinted and photographed at the border, U.S. officials announced Monday.

The security program, developed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, will begin at several unnamed ports of entry and will mostly affect people from Muslim and Middle Eastern countries.

After a 20-day testing period, all remaining ports of entry will implement the new system on Oct. 1, 2002.

Atty. Gen. John Ashcroft said the program will correct some of the problems that led to the Sept. 11 attacks.

“The vulnerabilities of our immigration system became starkly clear on Sept. 11,” Ashcroft said. “This system will expand substantially America’s scrutiny of those foreign visitors who may present an elevated national security risk.”

Under the new program, the fingerprints of many foreign visitors will be matched against a database of known criminals and a database of known terrorists.

The government says the security system will target:

- All nationals of Iran, Iraq, Libya, Sudan and Syria.
- Non-immigrant visitors whom the State Department determines present an elevated national security risk, based on criteria reflecting intelligence.

- Visitors identified by INS inspectors at the port of entry, using similar criteria.

Some immigration advocates say the program is treating visitors unfairly.

“This is a fancy way of racial profiling,” said Carl Baron, an immigration attorney and researcher at the University of Texas. “Just on the basis of where a person is from the government is going to subject them to these measures. You’re going to see fewer Middle Easterners willing to come to the United States, and I wonder whether that isn’t the real agenda.”

INS spokesman Bill Strassberger said the criticism was unfounded.

“The real agenda is to improve security in the United States and improve the knowledge of who is coming and what their business is here,” Strassberger said. “The terrorists were able to exploit what they perceived as weaknesses. We can make sure that won’t happen again.”

[JR: Why not offend and profile every one entering the U.S. from the Middle East including ISRAEL! Israelis who profess an avid support for the Zionist agenda are just as much of a threat to the U.S. as any other self-proclaimed fanatic with a political cause. We have more Zionists holding high government level positions than Muslims. They make the laws that hide themselves from us.]

AGENTS LEAVING BORDER PATROL IN DROVES, UNION SAYS

By Diane Smith, Fort Worth Star-Telegram, 07/30/02

Low pay, low morale and confusion over who will ultimately be the boss of the U.S. Border Patrol have prompted hundreds of agents to quit.

Many other agents are pondering career changes if these issues continue to plague the agency, union leaders say.

“In the southern border, we are trying to hang on to the people we have,” said T.J. Bonner, president of the National Border Patrol Council. The union represents some 9,000 U.S. Border Patrol agents and employees.

Hiring and retaining new agents has been difficult in recent months. Many experienced agents have left for better-paying jobs with other government agencies. The Transportation Security Administration, which is hiring air marshals and airport security workers, has lured hundreds of agents.

“One out of every four or five people are walking out the door,” Bonner said.

The air marshal program offers Border Patrol agents an immediate raise of $20,000 a year, said Joseph Dassaro, president for the Border Patrol agents union in San Diego, Calif.

Dassaro said this is a huge issue in the San Diego region, where 195 agents have left in six months.

...The job announcement on the Office of Personnel Management’s Web site lists starting salaries for Border Patrol agents as $30,466 to $37,043.

Another reason so many agents are leaving is what Dassaro calls a “mission identity crisis”. Agents are getting incredibly different messages from Congress, the agency, the media and the public. This creates “havoc in management in the INS and Border Patrol service,” he said.

The INS needs to hire 10,000 people by the end of September to fill its vacant budgeted positions. This includes inspectors, investigators, Border Patrol agents, special agents and support personnel. The INS said it is recruiting vigorously. ...

Xavier Rios, supervisory Border Patrol agent in the McAllen sector, said a full-time recruiting officer is working to attract new agents on college campuses and at job fairs.

“There are a lot of applications being submitted,” he said.

But agents, INS officials and immigration watch groups said filling jobs is not a simple task. Recruits must undergo rigorous training and testing before they are given posts.

“One of the things they need is a big raise,” said Steven Camarota, director of research with the Center for Immigration Studies in Washington, D.C.

Some monetary relief for agents may be available soon. Congress recently passed—and President Bush is expected sign—a supplemental spending bill that will fund some pay upgrades, effective Aug. 11.

But Bonner said the job has lost its allure for many agents, who believe they are no longer law enforcement officials, but rather simply guards.

Along the southern border, which stretches from Texas to California, agents can be expected to stay in one spot for eight to 10 hours a day. Bonner said many don’t find their work as challenging and fulfilling as the prospect of fighting terrorism as an air marshal.

Another source of concern has been the homeland security package moving through Congress, Bonner said.

The legislation would move the U.S. Border Patrol to the Homeland Security Department and remove some of the protections currently given to civil service employees.

Bonner predicted that within the first year of creation of the Homeland Security Department, the government will easily lose half the people in the Border Patrol—to other jobs or to retirement.

“You might as well call it the Department of Insecurity,” he said.

[JR: If the 10,000 Border Patrol openings cannot be filled in the short time that is left the most logical temporary solution would be the use of our military. Our hastily formed Homeland Security bureaucracy is still a work in progress. In the meantime our borders are left unsecured and open to any illegal Mexicans or anyone else with a “foreign agenda”.]

MEXICO PLANS AGENCY TO AID EXPATRIATES

By Richard Boudreaux, Los Angeles Times, 08/07/02

MEXICO CITY—President Vicente Fox, answering criticism that he had tuned out the voices of Mexican immigrants in the United States, announced the creation of a Cabinet-level agency Tuesday to lobby for the interests of Mexico’s 22 million citizens abroad.

Fox told 400 Mexican-American leaders that he will head the new National Council of Mexican Communities Abroad and soon appoint a Mexican living outside the country to coordinate its advocacy and assistance programs. The council will take advice from a panel of other Mexican expatriates, he said.

“The government... will approach our compatriots with a fraternal, agile hand,” Fox said at a decree-signing ceremony. “I can assure all Mexican migrants that we will not fail you!”

Mexicans abroad heard a similar pledge when Fox took office in December 2000, setting up a presidential office to look after their needs.

Its director, Juan Hernandez, shuttled between Mexico and the United States, lobbying to improve undocumented immigrants’ access to education and health care in America and to make it easier and cheaper for them to wire money back home.

But last month, Fox abolished the office without comment after Hernandez lost a power struggle with Jorge Castaneda, the foreign minister. Castaneda and other Cabinet officials had complained that the Texas-born literature professor announced new programs without consulting the agencies charged with carrying them out.

Mexican-American groups reacted with unexpected fervor, criticizing Fox for dumping a popular advocate without consulting them.

“Have we ceased to count?” asked leaders of two dozen such organizations in a letter announcing a boycott of Tuesday’s ceremony. They said they feared the new council, supplanting Hernandez’s office, would be less responsive.

In his speech, Fox struck a defensive yet reassuring tone. Mexico’s 18 million immigrants in the United States send home an estimated $9 billion a year to Mexico, the country’s third-largest source of income.

“Far from distancing ourselves from these concerns that we have had since the presidential campaign, today we are confirming them,” Fox said. He applauded Hernandez’s work but said it was time for a more coordinated effort involving seven government ministries.

Mexican officials said Fox felt rushed to answer his critics before starting to consult them over which groups will sit on the new council’s advisory panel.

Hernandez, who has not commented on his ouster, apparently will play no role in the new setup. On Monday, he was offered the position of coordinator of presidential records, with the task of setting up an Internet site and writing monthly reports on Fox’s achievements.

Fox promised to give “primordial importance” to the ideas of Mexicans abroad, “leaving behind the idea” that government policies toward expatriate citizens “are dictated unilaterally from Mexico”.

The reaction was mixed.

“This is very strange,” said Jose Jacques Medina, coordinator of the Comite Pro-Union, a Mexican-American group based in Maywood, Calif. “We don’t know how the Mexican-American communities will fit in, how much funding this council will get or where the money will come from.”

The Council of Presidents of Mexican Federations in Los Angeles and the Washington-based League of United Latin American Citizens gave the new council tentative support.

[JR: Mexican nationals have become a very rich source for tax revenues by the Mexican government at the rate of $9B per year. President Fox is going to do everything in his power to protect that lucrative source of income with the formation of the National Council for Mexican Communities. It is a growing trend in other countries and has the support of the One World Government planners. Illinois is far from the Mexican boarder yet the INS here is setting up temporary agencies to help ease the crush of Mexicans filing for applications to open bank accounts. They don’t have to show any proof as to whether they are here legally or not. With 18 million of his people here and still counting, Fox is going to be in charge of a very large coop of his expatriate chickens. A lot of these compatriots groups are going to grow and become a powerful political force and influence on the state level and beyond. Look at their advancement in California and in parts of the Southwest and how their presence influences local issues and elections.]

MEXICAN LEADER FOX GAINS RESPECT AT HOME FOR SNUBBING BUSH

By Traci Carl, Daily News, 08/16/02

MEXICO CITY (AP)—Under pressure from critics who say his close friendship with President Bush has not paid off, President Vicente Fox's cancellation of his Texas visit has cooled relations with Washington but enhanced his power at home.

Fox has struggled with a hostile Mexican Congress that has blocked his proposals or modified them beyond recognition. In one case, lawmakers prevented him from traveling to the United States, arguing that he needed to focus more on Mexico.

Late Wednesday, hours after Texas ignored his pleas and put a Mexican-American drug smuggler to death for killing a Dallas police officer, Fox canceled his Aug. 26-28 trip to four Texas cities and Bush's ranch near Crawford, where he had planned to push for an immigration accord.

Some note Bush has shifted the focus of U.S. foreign policy from immigration reform to fighting terrorism after the Sept. 11 attacks. Others argue that Fox's cozy ties with the U.S. president have accomplished little south of the border.

"It seems there is much giving, and we get nothing but smiles in return," said Mexican lawmaker Eddie Varon, a member of the formerly ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party. "Things are going to be taken seriously now..."

Mexico, which has no death penalty, had argued that Javier Suarez Medina was a Mexican citizen who was denied his right to legal help from the Mexican consulate. Texas authorities said it was not clear whether Suarez, who spent most of his life in the United States, was born in Mexico.

White House spokesman Jimmy Orr said Bush, a former Texas governor, "respects President Fox, and the two have an excellent professional relationship and a strong friendship." He had no comment about Fox's decision or a rescheduling of the meeting.

Alicia Buenrostro, spokeswoman for the Mexican leader, said Thursday that the two presidents have "excellent communication" and that "Bush understands the situation perfectly." She also had no date for their next meeting.

Many analysts said there was no question that the cancellation hurt the relationship with Bush.

George Grayson, a Mexico expert at the College of William & Mary in Williamsburg, Va., compared it to "shooting yourself in the foot with a machine gun."

But the decision apparently boosted Fox's position at home, where critics say he spends too much time cozying up to the United States and too little working on domestic policy or pushing major reforms after 71 years of single-party rule.

Varon, the congressman, said the move would help Fox in his troubled relationship with Mexican lawmakers.

[JR: The execution of a drug dealer, whose status as a Mexican national remains questionable, seems to be an insufficient reason for Pres. Fox to cancel his scheduled meeting with Pres. Bush. Either Fox has too many troubles at home or Bush has more than he can juggle at his rancho in Texas. Just what has Mexico given us taxpayers that we haven't paid dearly for in our taxes, our loss of jobs, our open borders, as well as the special allowances that are given to the Mexicans who settle here? Is the resentment coming from those who agreed to the $40 billion bailout that handed over to the U.S./IMF, all of Mexico's major assets including the Pemex Oil company? I'm sure that they are the ones who remember vividly the smiles on the faces of those who came from south of the border and stole it all.]

VENEZUELA COURT RULING ON COUP
SPARKS PROTEST

By Alexandra Olson, Daily News, 08/16/02

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—Angered by a Supreme Court decision exonerating four military officers accused of leading an April coup, backers of President Hugo Chavez protested in the streets Thursday and looked for ways to force the justices to resign.

Dozens of Chavez supporters protested near the presidential palace, though the gathering was smaller and calmer than one the day before, when troops drove away protesters trying to storm the Supreme Court. Four people were injured in the protests Wednesday.

Lawmakers with Chavez's Fifth Republic Movement Party vowed Thursday to unearth evidence of bribery and other wrongdoing that they said compelled a once-loyal court to turn against the president.

"It's a political decision that caters to the interests of coup leaders in Venezuela," charged Deputy Nicolas Maduro. He and other legislators said the ruling could inspire another coup against Chavez.

More is at stake: The court's agenda includes complaints accusing Chavez of misappropriating $2 billion in government funds, illegally accepting $2 million in campaign contributions and a "crimes against humanity" complaint that places on Chavez responsibility for slayings during the coup.

Chavez denies any wrongdoing. He had no immediate comment on the ruling, though his vice president and interior minister urged Venezuelans to accept it as part of democracy.

The court on Wednesday dismissed rebellion charges against army Gen. Efrain Vasquez, navy Rear Adm. Hector Ramirez Perez and Vice Adm. Daniel Comisso Urdaneta, and air force Gen. Pedro Pereira.

By an 11-8 vote, justices ruled there was no evidence the defendants forced Chavez from office April 12-14. The court said the four disobeyed a Chavez order to deploy troops against an April 11 opposition protest.

Obedying the order "would have led to a massacre," the ruling said. "The only possible conclusion is that the events were serious enough to justify the defendants' conduct."

Eighteen people were killed April 11, and dozens more died in rioting before loyalist troops restored Chavez to power.

Ruling-party activists argued Friday that the court's reasoning denies the existence of a coup condemned by governments worldwide and could encourage another attempt against Chavez, whose term ends in 2007.

Some business and labor sectors reportedly are considering calling a general strike sometime this fall. [JR: The Venezuelan Supreme Court's decision will encourage another coup to force Chavez out of office. He is not a popular leader in the elite circles of power as he is not a team player for their plans. Expect that the opposition is reading plans to stage anti-government demonstrations that will ignite civil unrest, and force Chavez to react. This is how Henry Kissinger's Andes Plan works. The U.S. has used this plan successfully for the past 50 years as it keeps the Latin American countries in turmoil... especially those governments we don't like or approve of. The U.S. will wait it out and when the timing is right we'll move in and set up the government we want. Whatever trumped-up charges of corruption, or crimes against humanity they accuse Chavez of doing, the same could be said of Pres. Bush and all world leaders today.]

GRAHAM'S SON CHIDES MUSLIMS ON 9/11

Tribune, 08/15/02

CHARLOTTE, North Carolina—The son of evangelist Billy Graham said Muslim leaders have not done enough to show their sorrow over the Sept. 11 attacks, and he challenged them to help rebuild New York City or compensate the victims' families.

"I'm certainly not preaching against Muslim people," Franklin Graham said Wednesday on WBT-AM radio. "I am concerned about our nation, and on Sept. 11 last year, we were attacked by followers of Islam, claiming to do this in the name of Islam. The silence of the clerics around the world is frightening to me."

Masood Khan, chairman of the Charlotte Islamic School board, said local Muslims were outraged by the statements from Franklin Graham, his 83-year-old father's chosen successor to lead the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association.

"What surprised us is that he's a leader of such stature. But instead of respecting other faiths, he's spreading hate," Khan said.

[JR: This is only the beginning of the many tirades that will be directed against the Muslim and Arab people by evangelists, politicians, the White House, media analysts, terrorists experts, "ethnic" lawyers and those beating the war drums before the anniversary of 9/11. The worse is yet to come.]

STUDY: FEDS MISSING WEAPONS, LAPTOPS

By Christopher Newton, Daily News, 08/05/02

WASHINGTON (AP)—Five agencies under Justice Department jurisdiction, including the FBI and DEA, have reported 775 missing or stolen weapons and 400 missing laptop computers, says a report released Monday.

Some of the weapons were used to commit crimes and the classification level of 218 of the missing laptops is unknown, said the audit report by the department's Office of Inspector General, an internal investigative unit.

The bulk of the missing laptops and weapons belonged to the FBI and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The report noted that "it is possible that the missing laptop computers would have been used to process and store national security or sensitive law enforcement information that, if divulged, could harm the public."

The Justice Department has already revealed to Congress that 449 weapons and 184 computers were lost or stolen.

In the inspector general's audit, the INS and the FBI reported losses of 539 and 212 weapons, respectively. The FBI reported an additional 211 missing weapons outside the time frame of the audit.

None of the other three Justice Department components—the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Marshals Service reported more than 16 missing weapons.

The BOP, DEA, and USMS audits cover weapons and laptop computers that were reported lost, missing, or stolen between October 1999 and August 2001. The FBI audit covers weapons and laptop computers that were reported lost, missing, or stolen between October 1999 and January 2002.

With respect to laptop computers, the DEA could not provide the number of losses, due to unreliable data. The FBI reported 317 of its more than 15,000 laptop computers as missing while the USMS reported 56 of its 1,450 laptops as missing.

Some of the weapons were believed to have been used in crimes.

According to the report, local police recovered from the pocket of a murder victim a handgun stolen from an FBI agent's residence in New Orleans. Police in Atlanta recovered a stolen DEA weapon during a narcotics search at a suspect's residence; and police in Philadelphia and Tampa recovered INS weapons that were used to commit armed robberies.

[JR: Is there ANYTHING this government can keep track of? They can't track computers, weapons, ILLEGAL Immigrants, foreign students, et al. ... But they sure can track LEGAL AMERICAN CITIZENS and everything they say or do. Do you think this is 'intentional'?]

IS NEW SONAR DRIVING WHALES ASHORE?

By Jim Trautman, Toronto Star, 08/05/02

On July 16, the U.S. Navy was granted a permit to deploy its frequency active sonar known as SURTASS LFA. The low-frequency Surveillance Towed Array Sensor System is a product of the Cold War. Its development to detect enemy submarines cost some $300 million.

Last week, there were three beachings of pilot whales on Cape Cod, Mass., the largest beaching in that area in the past 20 years. Is there a connection to the July 16 approval and the events of July 27?

According to a spokesperson for Coastal Watch, involved in the three rescue attempts of the pilot whales, there is no link. The U.S. navy is only operating the system in the Pacific area at present. [Or so we are told.] But, what is known is that in March 2000, near the Bahamas, at least four different species of whales and dolphins beached themselves shortly after a navy SURTASS LFA test.

The surveillance sensor system is capable of transmitting signals as powerful as 215 decibels. Marine scientists believe whales are affected by sounds louder than 110 decibels. At 180 decibels, a whale's eardrums can explode.

Whales are not the only ones who will be affected by this new military system; dolphins and other higher functioning mammals of the world's oceans are equally at risk.

The Navy's strategic plan is to cover 80 per cent of the world's oceans with the new active sonar system.

The system functions like a floodlight, scanning the ocean for vast distances and areas with intense sound. Each transmitter can generate 215 decibels of sound.

Scientists say this sound level is not only unsafe for whales and dolphins, but can also kill human divers in its path. The Navy's own testing has indicated that when the signals expand, the sound range can reach 240 decibels. To place the system in context, a decibel scale is much like the Richter scale for earthquakes: each employs small differences to increasing orders of magnitude.

In a test in 1991, a loud, low frequency signal sent from an island in the Indian Ocean was detected on the West Coast of the United States.

In late January 2001, the Navy released its own environmental impact report in which it admitted to exposing a 32-year-old Navy diver to 12 minutes of the LFA system, at 160 decibels. After 12 minutes, the diver experienced dizziness and drowsiness.

He was hospitalized, but continued to suffer memory problems and seizures. He improved only after being treated with antidepressants and seizure medications.

Whales and other mammals employ their sensitive hearing to follow migration routes, locate one another and keep track of their calves. Noise that can destroy their eardrums will kill whales.

Since whales travel in families, this could lead to more beachings in the future.

Dolphins will be impacted in the same manner. Even if the whales are not killed, it will play havoc with their migration patterns.

The SURTASS LFA was kept secret until 1995.

The Bush administration defends its use on the grounds of national security, arguing that new submarines are becoming quieter and more difficult to detect.

The Navy contends that safeguards will be in place to ensure that no harm comes to marine life. The Navy will be required to employ special measures, such as scanning for any marine mammals in the area and shutting the system down if animals are found. No mention is made of human divers.

But the Navy has been granted a five-year exemption from the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Under the act, the Navy and the personnel responsible could be charged over the death of a whale or other marine mammals. A "free pass" has now been granted.

Or as Michael Jasny of the Natural Resources Defense Council explains, "The Bush administration has issued a blank check for the global use of the system."

[JR: Environmental groups, led by the Natural Resources Defense Council, filed suit on 8/7/02 against the Navy and the National Marine Fisheries Service in U.S. District Court in San Francisco to block the Surveillance Towed Array Sensor System Low Frequency Active sonar. The suit rightfully alleges the SURTASS LFA's intense underwater sounds can severely damage whales and dolphins. It seems this administration has placed all its actions under the National Security umbrella so they have cart blanche exemption of both National and International law while a fourth-generation farmer can lose his farm should he inadvertently damage the environment of an endangered field mouse. It is unconscionable to me that they can flagrantly violate even the laws of Nature with complete indifference and still not held accountable in the eyes of the world.]

THE END OF THE BUSH CABAL? MORE CONSOLIDATION OF MONEY AND POWER

By Al Martin,

<http://www.almartinraw.com/column67.html>, 08/14/02

Donald Rumsfeld has announced that he wants to suppress the special report on Saudi Arabia initiated and paid for by the Department of Defense. It has always been a guideline of Republican Administrations, starting with Richard Nixon, to suppress the truth about Saudi Arabia. This new study actually states that Saudi Arabia is the "kernel of evil", that the Saudi government has supported terrorism at all levels since the 1970s, and that the United States has been aware of this but because of a mutually beneficial relationship has refused to do anything about it. This new study states that Saudi Arabia funds most of the terrorist groups in the Middle East and as the Middle East's major oil producer, it has a vested interest in maintaining perpetual tension in the Middle East.

Rumsfeld pointed out that if suddenly there were peace (if American peace initiatives were successful) it would knock $10 off the price of a barrel of oil.

You would take out the "uncertainty premium" out of a barrel of oil and Saudi Arabia certainly doesn't want that, considering that the Saudi Royal family has misspent or misappropriated a great deal of Saudi oil revenues over the years. That's why Saudi Arabia currently finds itself in a deficit position—because the Saudi government has so corrupted governmental processes regarding oil revenues.

In fact, Republican administrations have a collateral interest in seeing that the price of oil remains high because so much of Republican money comes from domestic oil companies because they need a price of $20 per barrel of crude or better to make a profit. They don't want to see the price of crude sink to $17 a barrel because it would choke off Republican money.

I was actually surprised about Rumsfeld's admission of the truth, when he pointed to the report and said that the Saudi regime has taken advantage of the American taxpayers. We have militarily supported Saudi Arabia. We have extended our defense shield to Saudi Arabia. At the same time, Saudi Arabia continues to finance terrorism. Rumsfeld's statement in effect makes it open season on the Saudis.

The study points out the entire concept of the 1973 Nixon-Kissinger accord with the Saudis, which encouraged them and other Middle East oil producers including Iraq to sextuple the price of a barrel of oil under the idea of petrodollar recycling. That was the concept that Iran, Iraq and Saudi Arabia would recycle their petro-dollars by purchasing high-technology weapons systems through U.S. defense contractors in order to become First World nations in terms of their military capability.

They were also ever mindful that defense contractors' profits are the most lucrative source of revenue for the Republican Party, oil and gas being the second most lucrative source.

Therefore the Nixon-Kissinger policy had a two-fold agenda—to jack up the price of oil and to recycle those petro-dollars into enormous defense spending, purchase orders coming from Saudi Arabia, Iran and Iraq to U.S. defense contractors, which in turn would enrich the Republican Party.

Does this mean that Rumsfeld is publicly abandoning this policy? I think it does because Rumsfeld was actually critical of the policy. If the current U.S. policy toward Saudi Arabia, that is, to protect and coddle and lie for Saudi Arabia, is no longer continued, then what is likely to happen is that U.S. peace initiatives may actually have a chance in the region. If that happens, we may be able to finally instill some stability in the region, in which case the price of oil is going to fall.

On a global level, this policy would increase political volatility and military instability within the Middle East region (that is what the Nixon-Kissinger policy called for) as well as the purposeful increase of tensions in the region in order to enrich the Republican Party in the United States.

His speech indicates that Rumsfeld is actually splitting from the Bush Cabal. Perhaps Rumsfeld finally understands that the days of the all-powerful Bush Cabal are coming to an end—and that, in fact, he is hedging his political bets. Both Rumsfeld and Colin Powell act as if they want to remain on the outside of it, shall we say.

We are seeing this again and again, and we see this counterweight growing. I believe that there is an increasing feeling in Washington that the days of the Nixon-Kissinger-Schlesinger-Bush Cabal is coming to an end.

It would, of course be more encouraging if there were rumblings in the top levels of the military that an invasion of Iraq is a bad idea. Our Department of Defense isn't saying that yet, but all of our allies, like Great Britain, Germany, France, and Netherlands immediately expressed their opposition, when the Bush Regime insisted that our allies were with us on this issue. Even Tony Blair stated that it's time for the Bush Administration to stop lying—for the sake of domestic American political consumption.

The lying of the Bush Administration has become transparent to everyone around the world. It is only in the United States that we, the people of the United States, the great naïve, flag-waving sado-masochists that haven't caught on yet. Despite the fact that the value of our IRA and 401(k) accounts has diminished by 50%.

All of the rest of the world has figured out what George Bush is doing, but for some reason we in the United States don't seem to be able to figure it out.

Our response to hard times and difficult situations (unlike the rest of the world) is to take more Prozac. The rest of the world faces reality, but the American concept of facing reality is to take more Prozac.

For Rumsfeld to announce that he wanted to suppress a study that the DoD itself funded—it is astounding that he said something like that.

For Treasury Secretary O'Neill to have said that Uruguay was close to economic collapse (he said this after he had gotten a White House spanking for saying Argentina was close to collapse)—it's surprising they haven't gotten rid of him. He's becoming a problem because he keeps telling the people the truth.

It's interesting that they haven't gotten ridden of O'Neill. What it tells you is that the administration is becoming increasingly nervous about too many people within the various agencies of the administration telling the truth. It used to be under the Bush Cabal that anybody telling the truth would be immediately gotten rid of, but that's not happening now. The Bush Administration is afraid that if they do start getting rid of people who tell the truth, there will be too many questions raised. They're gradually losing control over Pro-Gov-Net Media (Pro Government Network Media) and they understand that this will be the last term of a Bush Administration.

Why do you think they're trying to accelerate their tax-cut policies for the rich. The tax cuts for the rich which were not supposed to go into effect until 2004—George Bush said we're going to try to bring those forward in order to "provide some economic stimulus". That's a lie because tax cuts for the rich provide almost no economic stimulus—and he knows it.

I think that the Bush Administration believes not only that it will be one term, but also that the Bush Cabal is coming to an end. Therefore they are simply trying to accomplish their agenda. They have made the top 1% control two-thirds of the nation's private wealth and their second goal is to turn the United States into a defacto tax-free nation for the Republican Rich. And I think that's where they're going.

The War on Terrorism is just a constant diversion, and that's the way we're fighting it. All of General Tommy Franks' (he's the commander of allied forces in Afghanistan) requests for troops in Afghanistan are denied. The War on Terrorism has become the raw, naked beast it was always intended to be—a diversion.

The Bush Cabal has given up and all they're doing is trying to put in place as much of their agenda as possible.

They are appropriating money with reckless abandon and complete disregard for the economy—as if they don't care any more. Even the Washington Post has noticed, having published an article called "Spend spend spend".

Then, when everything falls apart in the United States, that money from Republican offshore accounts will be repatriated and the Bush Cabal will simply buy up all American publicly-traded businesses and industries for ten cents on the dollar. We see this massive conversion of Republican scamscateer money into gold, in anticipation of further declines in the dollar.

People should understand that despite the fact that the Bush Cabal will be a one-term regime, nevertheless, they are going to win. Why? Because they control all of the money.

They are purposely throwing the monkey wrench into the economy to sabotage everything, so they can buy everything at ten cents on the dollar. Then they short the market to create the capital they're going to use to buy everything up at ten cents on the dollar. The reason they can be so certain in their trading policies of generating fresh cash is because it is the administration itself, which is wreaking the economic havoc.

It is all a very neat circle, and therefore we reiterate—there is only one thing you can do for now. Continue to short market rallies. Convert your profits into gold and into offshore accounts and remember that the ultimate Bush Cabal Survival Kit is Spam™, Prozac™, and Krugerrands™. And that remains unchanged.

Meanwhile in Louisiana, Bush was bragging that the Homeland Security Agency has control over a hundred other federal state and local agencies and has become the most powerful agency in the land. He said we shouldn't be frightened of this (and I don't think he meant it to come out the way it did), he said, "The Office of Homeland Security cannot be hampered by a thick book of rules." I think it came out the wrong way.

Bush also said that now is not the time to worry about civil liberty issues because we have a war to win against terrorism. He said that if we were defeated by terrorism their civil liberties wouldn't mean anything anyway. He talks about the "terrorists", as if they're the Soviet Army of old. His audience, a lot of young JC's and high school student rabid Republicans with flattop haircuts clapped. You know the kind with buttons that say, "I support the electric chair." You can tell where these kids are coming from. He said we've already captured two thousand terrorists, then he said there were two thousand more who weren't so lucky. They clapped for that, and then these blond-haired, blue-eyed boys got up and started waving their hands yelling, "Kill them, kill them, kill them." After that I think he tried to tone it down a little.

Bush also said the more authority that we give the Office of Homeland Security the better job they can do in protecting our nation. The closer we move to giving the Office of Homeland Security ABSOLUTE authority the closer to absolute security we will have. That's the first time I've heard anybody in the Bush Administration use the word absolute power and absolute authority.

When Cheney addressed the California Commonwealth Club, which is essentially a haven of Right Wing Scamscateers, some students tried to heckle him and tried to put up some sign. I haven't seen anything like this. Usually the police will try to escort them out. But the cops came in there in force and tackled these kids and pummeled them. They showed about five seconds then the tape went blank. Cheney said that those who refuse the Bushonian policies on security are the "terrorists' best friend". That's another story they like to weave now.

Cheney said that when it comes to protesters let this be an example that the government has decided that protesters will be treated with increasing severity, that they will no longer "coddle" protesters no matter how naïve and misguided they may be, that from now on they will take a very tough approach with all who would dare disagree with the State.

Cheney could bring back that old Kent State Gambit, i.e., "Shoot 'em in the Streets." But that's probably not necessary.

CSPAN showed a National Association of Police Chiefs spokesman with all these new high-technology, non-lethal weapons systems. They showed the new high-energy tasers which aren't like the older models that use 50,000 volts; these are the new super 250,000-volters. He said it was enough to take down an elephant. What he said was that it would actually scramble an elephant's brain.

They showed other weapons like shooting beanbags, which explode into nets, which have weights on the end of them. It's shot at 200 feet per second and when it hits you it opens up into a fiber filament net with lead weights on the end of it. They showed new stun gas to control people. He was talking about the companies making these weapons and he mentioned Oliver North's company, Guardian Industries. They're making a fortune because police chiefs are getting directives from the Office of Homeland Security to purchase a lot of new high-technology non-lethal weapons. A whole new generation of weapons have been developed which have longer ranges etc, and he said there will be some casualties because as you make these weapons more effective, you come closer to the edge of making them lethal.

They showed these new Kevlex gray helmets and body armor and they showed police practicing with their new Kevlar matted shields, which have in red analog digitized print, "STATE SECURITY". You see a row of these guys coming at you with these gas guns and projectile guns and high-energy weapons and it's really frightening. The Office of Homeland Security has been telling them that as State control tightens that at some point there will be civil disobedience. And they're preparing for it already.

Then there's also a commercial that's been playing on TV, which shows a college-age kid goes into a library. There's an old librarian up front, and the kid's got these book request slips in his hand, and he says to the librarian, "I can't find these books anywhere." She types them into the computer and says, "Those books are no longer available, citizen. May I see your national identification card."

The kid doesn't understand and he walks out of the library. She watches him and pushes a button underneath her desk and just as he's going out the door, these two guys in government-issue blue JC Penney suits with Rayban sunglasses take him by each arm, and they tell him, "Citizen, we want to talk to you." The caption at the end says, "Freedom. Defend it. Cherish it. Fight for it." The American Arts Council sponsors the commercials. It's a good sign that they haven't banned the commercials yet, but I imagine they're working on it.

After Bush's speech they said the Office of Cyberspace Security would be given the power to ban commercials, which express any anti-State or civil libertarian attitudes.

You can tell that somebody at the White House has been reading this column because when he signed the trade act, they were showing close-up shots of George Bush and you can tell that there's extra make-up under his cheekbones. The light hits underneath his cheekbones and you can tell that there's an extra layer of make-up to cover-up the facial discolorations. As we mentioned previously, when George Bush lies, you can see red splotches appear on his face. (See "Think Like a Bush: Lie Coordination Bureau Needed")

Another inside source has told us that they're also giving salt tablets to Bush before he does interviews so he won't sweat as much. After all it just doesn't look right when he's up there sweating with all those splotchy red marks on his face. Of course, cosmetic treatment won't help the lying, but it will prevent the telltale signs.

As we've noted before, Jeb Bush sweats at his hairline when he lies publicly. Now when Jeb Bush speaks on camera, they put a white rouge base under his hairline.

But they're just treating the symptoms (not the disease) of lying.

The IMF under U.S. pressure has agreed to lend Brazil another $30 billion to keep it afloat. They're going to refinance our emergency loan to Argentina and give them an extra $5 billion. The entire amount of defaulted debt in Central and South America, the IMF announced, now exceeds a trillion dollars. Yet the IMF and the World Bank and individual countries like the U.S., Germany and Japan have to continually lend these nations money although they already have a cumulative trillion dollars of defaulted debt. They're not even pretending to roll over the debt. Even the pretense is gone.

We are in the midst of an enormous worldwide debt deflation as we have stated before. That's why we are not seeing inflation in the United States. The reason we don't see it here is because it's done against a backdrop of a worldwide debt deflation.

There has been a shift in Bushonian policy to stop placing restrictions on IMF loans and to approach IMF and World Bank lending and direct lending by the U.S. and other nations simply as direct band-aid measures to keep these countries afloat as long as possible prior to a worldwide economic collapse.

What we should do is just act to stabilize and gradualize the worldwide economic decline and as much as possible to push out this collapse into the future by band-aid solutions. Even the crustiest Republicans understand this now because the world is essentially sinking in a quagmire of debt.

This whole planet—every nation, every treasury, all business and industry, all capital marketplaces—is drowning in a sea of defaulted debt.

On a more humorous note, WorldCom announced that they found another $3.3 billion missing—after the previous $3.8 billion that was missing. And I love the explanation of the former accountant. He was asked, “Where did you find the $3.3 billion missing?” And the guy said, “Well, we looked at our reserve accounts.” And that’s all he said. They had to practically drag it out of him. “Well, what did you find out when you looked at the reserve accounts?” he was then asked. “Oh, the reserves were all gone,” he answered. “Well, where did they go?” he was asked again. And the guy answers, “We don’t know. They seem to have disappeared (into a series of offshore accounts.)” Cue up the laugh track.

POSTSCRIPT: The remnants of Global Crossing have been bought out for three cents on the dollar by the shadowy Chinese investment group Hutchison Whampoa, which is majority owned by the Pilgrim Investment Trust, which in turn is controlled by the Bush Family. In the past, Hutchison Whampoa also got the Panama Canal deal.

It was also announced that since U.S. Air collapsed, Hutchison Whampoa will buy them out as well—for three or four cents on the dollar.

This completes the Republican cycle and illustrates what George Bush meant by “the continuous consolidation of money and power into higher, tighter and righter hands”.

You short the market during a Bushonian Administration, knowing that Bushonian economics will cause the markets to fall. You take the profits from those shorts, which is essentially nothing but a transfer of wealth from the American people to you. You stick it in your offshore accounts, hedge it with gold to protect yourself (because obviously the value of the dollar falls during a Bush Administration) then you convert those dollars back out when they’re cheap and the price of gold is high and use them to buy corporations that your own economic policies caused to fail, for three or four cents on the dollar, thus completing the entire Republican cycle of control.

It is diabolical and it is brilliant. It is the constant transfer of wealth from the American people to the Bush Cabal because it is the American people who are, by and large, long the market through their 401(k)s, IRAs and personal trading accounts. It is traditionally Bush Cabalists and other Republican Scamscateers who are short the market.

NEVADA CORPORATIONS:

Lawful Avoidance Of Key IRS Designations

Budget's "Tip of the Week" #8:

Avoiding the IRS Designations of:

“Personal Service Corporation”, “Personal Holding Company” and “Controlled Group”

The tax advantages of properly operated Nevada corporate shelters may be secondary to the benefits of liability protection, asset protection and privacy but they are worth discussing all the same, especially since many tax professionals don’t seem to “get it”.

The IRS will tag a corporation as a “Personal Holding Company” and assess a surcharge of 39.6% on undistributed earnings in cases where more than 60% of the corporation’s income is derived from “passive” sources such as dividends, interest and rental income. The IRS applies a designation of “Personal Services Corporation”, assessing all income at a flat rate of 35%, in cases where a C corporation is engaged in the performance of personal services (consulting-type work) and where such services are performed by employee-owners. Yet another IRS designation is that of “Controlled Group”, based on complicated rules for determining allowable cross-ownership of corporations, whereby the IRS seeks to lump all of the income into a single, consolidated return—resulting in the highest possible tax rate, of course.

Each of these designations is based on the corporation’s OWNERSHIP. How very fortunate, then, that ownership of Nevada corporations is statutorily permitted to be very PRIVATE: It is not a matter of public record, only of the protected (by NRS 78.257) internal records of the corporation.

To be considered a “Personal Holding Company” a corporation must be owned by five or fewer stockholders. It is totally permissible for a corporation to earn 100% of its income from passive sources, as long as it is owned by six or more stockholders. It is similarly easy to avoid the designation of “Personal Services Corporation”: Don’t own the stock! “Controlled Group” status is also very easily avoided with Nevada corporations: Simply ensure that no entity owns 80% or more of any other entity and that in brother-sister corporate relationships there are six or more stockholders. As no liability is attached to stock ownership, surely you could find a trustworthy friend or six who wouldn’t mind holding stock in the corporation? If not, give us a call—we know of hundreds of corporations in similar circumstances.

With regard to “Controlled Group” status, the IRS has from time to time invoked Section 482 of the Infernal Revenue Code, which lumps together income from corporations if they APPEAR to act out of a unity of interest. To our knowledge, however, even this blanketing regulation is relatively easily overcome, as long as the corporations act in their own, separate, well-documented self-interest.

GLOBAL ALLIANCE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION

PUBLIC NOTICE

August 25, 2002

This notice will be construed as a continuation of compliance with provisions necessary to establish presumed fact (Rule 301, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and attending State rules). All interested parties have failed to rebut any given allegation or matter of law addressed herein. The position will be construed as adequate to requirements of judicial notice, thus preserving fundamental law. A true and correct copy of this Public Notice is on file with and available for inspection at the newspaper CONTACT which is responsible for publishing the instrument as a legal notice.

This document is to notify interested parties to Global Alliance Investment Association (GAIA) of intent to immediately render assistance to the Philippine PEOPLE by providing assistance to PRINCE JULIAN MORDEN TALLANO, court appointed JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATOR who not only represents the Royal Family of the Philippines including all known Sultans, even from Sabah and Brunei, but also the Filipino people in general. This assistance will take the form of facilitating the payment of the debt of the Republic of the Philippines to the ESTATE so that the ESTATE can pay its taxes and thereby uplift the cities and towns. It will also facilitate the purchase of the gold so long withheld from the use of the people, enough gold to make the Philippine people the most wealthy on planet Earth.

IT IS HEREBY RESOLVED that a copy of this Public Notice and the attached Letter of Intent and Nevada State registration status for the FOUNDATION FOR THE TALLANO ESTATE, INC. shall be given to the Recorder of Clark County, Nevada to become a part of the official GAIA records.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned have executed and sealed this notice as of the date hereof.

For the Corporation, dated at Makati, Manila, the Philippines, this 25th day of August 2002.

LETTER OF INTENT

We, PRINCE JULIAN MORDEN TALLANO, court appointed JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATOR who not only represents the Royal Family of the Philippines including all known Sultans, even from Sabah and Brunei, but also the Filipino people in general, and GLOBAL ALLIANCE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION (GAIA), owner and possessor of more than thirty five trillion dollars of the debt of the US Treasury, guaranteed by the Federal Reserve System, and payable in gold, do hereby agree to join together to effect the collection of all of those judgements owed and long past due from and by the government of the Republic of the Philippines so that the TALLANO ESTATE can begin to pay all of the real estate taxes due to all of the Philippine Cities and Municipalities and thus immediately lift nearly all Filipinos from their government-imposed poverty.

A partial list of these judgments and debts are estimated as follows:

GOLD ROYALTY (5% of 1% beginning 1950 @ 7% compounded)	P20.582T
P1B COSTS AND DAMAGES @ 7% beginning Feb 4, 1972	P7.612B
P2B LANDBANK BONDS @ 7% beginning Aug 13, 1968	P19.956B
P500M COSTS AND DAMAGES @ 7% beginning March 7, 1995	P816M
P500M COSTS AND DAMAGES (equivalent to 23M shares PNB)	P816M

We also agree to activate the 400,000 metric tons of gold withheld from the use of the people (by the government but now ordered relocated to the vault of the central bank) by purchasing it at a price of $400 per ounce via a joint venture with the National Treasury. This will establish a solid floor of $400 per ounce as the price of gold which will allow the return of the use of gold as the standard for the currencies of Southeast Asian nations at the same time as it returns the mines to profitability, to cooperate in financing the sale of some of the Estate properties, initiate large infrastructure projects, and to add members to the Global Alliance for the development of these nations.

Done at Makati City, Republic of the Philippines this 7th day of June 2002.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

IN MEMORIAM

Our loyal friend and attorney, Victoriano Agcaoili, died unexpectedly of a heart attack July 19, 2002. We sorely miss his sage advice and wry humor; he saved us from disastrous errors many times. We are grateful to God for the time Victor was allowed to help us. Victor was reported to have said, "Leave these people? No, no. I want to see how this all turns out!" We are quite sure he is now standing beside Dad where he has an even better view of how it will turn out. His long-time friend, Oliver Lozano, has agreed to assume his attorney duties; in our hearts there is no replacement for Victor.

CONTACT OR SPECTRUM?

I want to briefly respond to a most unusual question from a totally "out of the blue" person: "It appears Spectrum will fail, possibly close, so will you go back to writing for CONTACT or what?"

I have never stopped writing for CONTACT—but I have NOT written, nor have my compatriots written for Spectrum. Tails wag a lot of dogs, my friends. Therefore, "or what" has no meaning.
