Geological Bomb Ticking Away

Cascadia Subduction Zone earthquake of magnitude 9-10 remains probable—be prepared.

KUNG HEI FAT CHOY FROM LIMBOLAND
(HAPPY CHINESE NEW YEAR)

In light I AM Cohan (Professor) Anthonious Soltec. Geophysics is my "topic". Warnings are my intent.

I basically come uninvited this morning because sleep has again overtaken the lot of human experiencing species awaiting the next major distractions.

I want to give a bit of information to the inquiring few who live in the very way of massive changes.

WHEN things will happen is NOT up for my revelations for so much depends on who does what next. I can only relate known expected events.

In Europe, just for starters, you will be finding volcanic unrest and major shifting of water bodies. I want you to look at your maps and consider HOW THINGS GOT TO BE AS THEY PRESENT TODAY—EVEN TO THE RUINS ON THE HILLS.

People look far back into history which is absolutely so short a time as to be out of consideration except for the so-called "mystical mythology". No, students, things change because THINGS CHANGE and those changes are indeed methodical and within all the given LAWS OF PHYSICS. Land masses drop and rise, shift and rumble and depending on which side, as in oceans or seas, those sinks and rises send water masses cascading all over dry land in the direction away from the abutment (land rise).

This is basically explained by "subduction" of a tectonic plate as it rams under an adjacent plate where the one side is lifted and the subduction side is lowered. The upper side will tear up the landscape but will send the major water flow "off shore". This is well pictured by prior happenings where off the West Coast of the U.S. (example) the tsunami was experienced in the Pacific and hit Japan with massive destruction. The point is always to "run" but not to "hide"—get high and stay dry. This, however, is not my focus for today because it is amazing to me that so little attention is paid to major potential happenings.

As an example it is within the past few days that a super quake of plus 7 hit in the waters a bit South of Mindanao, Philippines and not one single report was made in the local media. This COULD HAVE wiped out the entire island chain of “Sulu” islands and inclusive of Palawan, the major resort island off the “mainland” Philippines.

Perhaps it goes unnoticed because of the major factions making war against themselves as orchestrated by the “foreign” warmongers—AFTER THE OIL RESERVES WHICH ARE THE BIGGEST IN ASIA.

So much for that but KNOW IT and keep your eye on the REAL bouncing ball.

With the recent Tsunami Indian Ocean and Malaccan Straits taking out well over 300,000 (oh yes it did), I suggest you turn your attention to cause and effect.

We will discuss that for just a minute and THEN TURN OUR ATTENTION TO THE WESTERN COASTAL AREAS OF “NORTHERN” U.S.

WHAT’S IT ALL ABOUT IN ONGOING QUAKE AREA OF INDIAN OCEAN?

Bluntly spoken: The plate in its entirety that makes up Nicobar and Andaman chain is EXPECTED TO TOTALLY COLLAPSE.

This is not good because every new movement in that area also impacts a part of the same “plate” which is, or was, attached to the Aceh province of Indonesia. The entire area is a “jelly” puddle and landmass continues to rise in the sea areas, i.e., Malaccan Straits.

You are simply not hearing about these things but things are taking place deep in the mantle and crust of the “landmass” and undersea areas in that location taking in thousands of miles of continental breaks, peninsulas, and archipelagos that have never been experienced IN HISTORY.

The quakes are slowly moving northwards towards Assam in India and it is a fact that the recent Aceh quake was truly rooted in the area of Assam. What is happening, students and observers, is that the 700 miles of the Andaman plate line is truly collapsing. How deep that collapse will be remains to be seen. All of the stabilization poured into the area has not even slowed the major hits.

I suppose, though, that you need not be concerned about the recovery of people because it is noted that the United Nations “head” has appointed former U.S. President Bill Clinton to oversee the rebuilding of the areas in trouble. Yes I knew you would feel ever so much relieved.

GEOLOGICAL BOMB TICKING AWAY

I would ask that Ellen please see that her friends, depending on us, get this writing and not wait for the next paper. This is not to PANIC, just inform of potential REAL problems building.

You who live along the Western Seaboard of what is delineated as States of Oregon and Washington are in grave danger of a cataclysmic tsunami which will rival the Southeast Asian area recently.

This will be a Cascadia Subduction Zone quake which will be some few miles, 75 at most, off the Oregon coast.

This Subduction Zone is about 600-miles long and is the rift between two massive plates that make up the earth’s surface. The landmasses are mammoth and are smashing into one another.

Come on, Sleepies, this very thing happened in January, 1700 causing massive damages in Japan as the Pacific Ocean hosted a massive tsunami that missiled across the Sea of Peace at over 500 miles/hr. The U.S. land mass rose as the plate subducted and pushed the waves back across the Sea. With the concurrent drop in the sea floor the deadly wave headed West towards Japan and yes indeed, East to the West Coast of the U.S.

We are speaking here of a major earthquake of plus 9R and that causes not only tsunamis but will wreck havoc on towns along the West Coast. Hillsides will actually liquefy and then the typical damages will topple buildings, power-lines and destroy roads, bridges and access-egress routes into and out of the areas. This means that you will likely have to WALK to higher ground instead of pack-train up a hillside to high ground. My suggestion is that in those areas two that area just mentioned, KNOW that the slippage will be triggered in both directions as that massive plate slips.

MASSIVE “BURNS”

Hoping to not panic but give more caution and attention to possibilities, I will address the next most probable events as you deal with off-shore expectations—oil-well dumping and FIRES.

Whether you experience fires starting from volcanic eruptions or BIC lighters—gas and oil BURN when ignited. With the massive numbers of off-shore loading facilities and actual pumping wells attached to floating rigs, you have potential for a far worse catastrophe than shaking and rolling. Gas lines and oil conduits which are broken in the quakes themselves will likely ignite, so immediately move away from those potential flame-throwers.

OTHER PLACES

Can’t take time now to deal with “other” potential areas of massive hits but keep the notices aimed at the East Coast as well. Remember that the New Madrid quake completely rerouted the rivers IN YOUR TIME ZONE.

The potential for a full continental rift through the U.S. north and south is not only likely but also quite certain as major land mass shifts trigger one another.

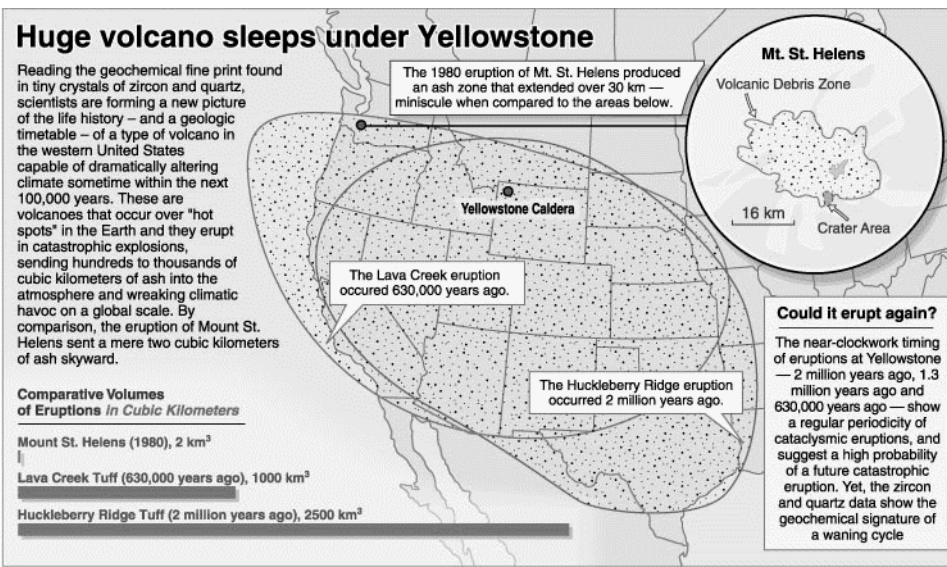

I get an “Oh gosh...” from as far inland as Las Vegas with terror and trembling because of the potential of wipeout of the major dam in the area. Hey guys, look again at WHICH WAY THE WATER WILL FLOW—and get out of the way if you are downstream of that lake. Las Vegas itself is as safe as anywhere around.

I have addressed the circumstances BEFORE and I address this briefly here because I promised to do so if YOU would help us see through this mission under way.

I will not take advantage of the pressures on our teams trying to get this job done in the Philippines to REPEAT that which we covered IN DEPTH long ago—please, get the Journals and study up. We told you that “in your lifetime” you would really wish you had paid attention. Instead, you participated in denying the whole of the information, shifted away and basically failed to prepare or even address the very life-sustaining elements of your journey in your arguments over who did what to whom and “I don’t like...” or “GOD WOULDN’T DO THAT”! Surely enough, “God DOESN’T do ‘that’,” whatever it is you choose to blame on HIM or poor Mother Nature in the face of the EVIL that MAN commits.

I would consider where we said the land would rise naturally—and weep over the loss of the things of survival set before you and which are now GONE. This is not to blame; it is to ask you to realize that every CAUSE has an effect. You do something, good or bad in perception and action, and the CONSEQUENCES will come back unto you—PERIOD, it is UNIVERSAL LAW. Even in a tsunami the waters go OUT and rush back as in VISIBLE and undeniable “cause and effect”.

I would suggest that Eric please check out the Buck generator and be ready to pull it to wherever emergency power MUST BE MAINTAINED while the grid is down and yes, the grid WILL BE DOWN. Make sure you have fuel for your smaller generators and keep them handy and ready to “start”. Make things take place NOW, in advance. Get your walking shoes, a pack ready with water and some supplies and be ready to grab and go.

The next is to be ready to RECEIVE people displaced if they can get across the waters which will separate many of the coastal areas from mainland mass.

It is probable that in the areas of what you refer to as Portland and Seattle “metro” you will have more than 10-15% of the buildings brought down. The quake itself is more likely to be greater than 10R on that “Rinky-dink” scale.

It is better that you do not expect much help from these major cities as they will be serving themselves but much of the coastline will be devastated AND ISOLATED.

One type of tsunami that threatens the West coast is caused by a quake just off the coast which will send an instant tsunami ashore—in just a few minutes and certainly less than half an hour. If the tsunami is actually caused by a massive quake on the other side of the Pacific Ocean, on this side you can have quite a good warning time.

Quakes and slipping fault lines in Alaskan areas and off Japan (triggered by volcanic eruptions) should be having rapid warning capability so that if you are READY to go you can probably make it to high ground.

If the quake is in the Cascadian Subduction Zone the likely ONLY warning which will be recognized is the quake itself.

Since the clear and present danger seems to be in

RE: VALENTINE'S DAY FILIPINO STYLE—DJE

KING'S "X"—VALENTINE'S DAY Filipino style!

Where will YOU be when the sun goes down this evening? Let us assume by the time you read this it will be YOUR Valentine's Day Fraud upon Mankind. Every year here we have watched and observed the ever more absurd call to "sin" with "King's X" approval in the face of the following WARNINGS.

It is now appropriately recognized that the spread of venereal and sex-oriented diseases and more unwanted pregnancies and thus secret abortions occur from activities on Valentine's Day than any other time segment.

With that published it is likewise noted that from Friday on through today the expressions of "get some someway" is filling the papers, radio and my goodness the notable one in passing was the following: It is not an official holiday BUT without penalty you can take the whole afternoon OFF to celebrate with "a friend", this romantic day—but try to be back to clock out timely. Many Government offices will close at or before noon.

When I say "King's X" I mean it as in the old game of "it's safe space—no one can get you".

Whole advertising pages are devoted to motels, hotel specials and even restaurants with available "rental" rooms. The upper-strata establishments offer decorated condoms and Viagra and of course, "total privacy". The facts are, however, they will not stand responsible if you meet your spouse coming out of the room you just rented for your tryst.

Another interesting thing is that the papers are offering full page ads for "Sex Toys" and that would indicate "things" but if you move on to the ad section there are PAGES of message ads, "relief" ads, relax and enjoy ads and these playmates come in all ages and sexes and "preferences".

No wonder this is now called the Prostitution Hub and Human Trafficking Center of our new Global Order. To make it worse the published realization goes that "Just say no" actually means "yes" and "Keep them guessing!"

The price is established for services by what level of quality are your gifts to the other party in participation, "where" lunch or dinner, status of the place you go to "perform" and one "rally" is over the fact that Japan now limits "entertainers" allowed into their country putting their own citizens out of work. Entertainment? Oh indeed, and one gift is left you can share and share and share—HIV.

I said before that I am "too old" and "too tired" and boy today I am "too everything" including ashamed to be a human person claiming to want to do some "goodly" service. I have had the jokes come in whereby it is stated: "Everything is simply T&A." Now recognize what T and A stands for and you will realize that everything of focus takes place between the two.

There is no question in this place about prostitution with all its meanings put forth but only "who is the Pimp involved" in this, that or the other. Unfortunately, as in the ongoing wars in Mindanao—it comes out yesterday—it is the U.S., of course-of course. Along with this now public revelation the Ambassador to the U.S. (a Fidel Ramos man) proclaims there will be more "HELP".

How bad is it? Well, there is a claim of war and deaths but the fact is that there are NO BODIES and since we are talking of Jolo, Sulu, TawiTawi and other jungle settings where the "training sessions" already are taking place with the U.S. (IN OIL COUNTRY, OF COURSE) who will count the dead?

I challenge anyone who denies that we are PEOPLE OF THE LIE. Moreover, I do not believe that many want it any other way—except that the lie be in "their favor" in the "get" category. We, in fact, have just stumbled through one of the more interesting and supposedly "international" lies we have yet encountered. THE CLUES ARE ALWAYS THERE TO SEE AND THIS GAME IS YET TO FINISH UNFOLDING EVEN THOUGH WE HAVE CALLED THE PLAYERS ON THIS ONE.

There is so much fraud, corruption and "VK Durham-type" frauds around as to stagger the imagination and all want to blame, scam or sham us. We don't bite nearly so frequently any longer.

We do always get what we ultimately need for confirmation of our position. VK has loudly, publicly and globally stated that she has and refuses to release all the documents and corporation documents along with records and contracts belonging thereto. Thank you, VK. We DON'T NEED THEM—but you do! Her latest postings are pure garbage, as usual, but very, very revealing.

To any of you who want more information on Earthquakes, etc., I ask that you not anticipate that from "me" for we have to speculate and gather information the same as all others. We are totally grateful for the warnings and fragments of reminders to PAY ATTENTION. I choked when last night I turned on the news which was Royal Family trash and moved to some program on "SCIENCE" only to blunder into a NEW study of Seattle and expectations and it is far worse than I had ever guessed as to danger-zone geologic evidence that this will be a MAJOR disaster point for both off-shore quake with immediate killer Tsunami but worse the side fault runs directly UNDER the city itself and expectation of pulverizing (liquefaction) is fully anticipated. Moreover, it is recognized that when that area goes, so goes the rest of the plate and all are SUBDUCTING and thus all will probably bring highly destructive inshore flooding from the ocean actions. And that is just talking about the West Coast of the U.S. which is obviously a real sure call for NORTH OF SEATTLE. Try to keep your feet dry, Wes. Vancouver is on that rift.

Back to that Royal British Family inbreeding—boy, we just change even the Church laws to meet the wishes of the "King", don't we? Well, like the Pope regarding the Roman Catholic Church is Prince Charles sure your little sterno stoves are available and ready to at least heat water. I further suggest you get some instant noodles and if you have hot water capability you can have a food source at hand. It is winter so in areas such as, say, Tehachapi, you keep extra heavy coats available to snatch if necessary, along with some blankets and warmers.

If early warnings hit then Ellen ask Gene to be ready to get fuel into the coach, water and dump tanks ready for use. That means to make sure, as well, that the Butane tank is full even if not hooked into the system and that the generator is available and will start AND RUN. Check for any mice structures throughout the vehicles and make sure you won't have fires from same.

I suggest it is time to get the Aerostar WORKING with hoses checked and in good repair, full of gas and use for some runs to Bakersfield at least to make sure it is road worthy.

Quakes of massive scale will damage roads to and from all areas from Tehachapi so make sure that the transportation you have available is road-worthy.

No, we are not inviting the world into the safe-place. All had opportunity and they simply set about to destroy us—this is the "consequence" of such actions. God is not going to snatch you away from yourself. So be it.

I wish I had better long-range "good news" but, friends, lack of being prepared is the most destructive one thing a man can do to himself.

I am not your Guru; I am a geologist and you do not have to rely on "off shore" mystical input—the SIGNS and changes are happening as we speak. You cannot turn off an earthquake because you don't want to hear about it. The only thing you can do is ignore or attend the thing and HOPE that the extremes of movement won't happen. A little bit of sugar makes the medicine go down more easily but too much sugar will put you into a coma. I am obligated to give you the "worst" and you can work from that aspect any way you choose for the ending events may well be NOTHING or WORSE than the projections. For instance, the worst area of Southern California as to expectations is a break in the gas line outside San Bernardino—to the east.

There is a massive chasm it traverses and the fire that will hit along those fault intersections is going to be INCREDIBLE in scope.

Man, however, will do whatever Man chooses on his best or worst days and therein lays the fact of it.

Who cares? And, "you are a fraud" is interesting response but in the ending we shall certainly see who might be right-on. Listen to your GUIDANCE and it will serve you well.

In deep respect for our team, I remain in service while I salute you for moving far beyond the expected and, frankly, into the Godly.

By the way, you have paid too little attention to the happenings at your North and Southern poles, people, while things are now in motion which cannot be reversed. Our "boat team" is paddling as fast as they can so you, please, listen to YOUR guides and guardians and act accordingly, for our plates are running over the edges and swamping the life-boats.

You are manifest MORTALS and all the wishing otherwise without changing "substance" is not going to "happen". "Changing dimensions" is exactly that—CHANGING DIMENSIONS. Mortal and Immortal are opposite ends of the pole, students, and sitting in the middle of the pivot is foolish indeed.

Salu,
Soltec
dharma

[As an afterthought, Soltec asked us to mention that Yellowstone still is a mammoth threat.]

to the Church of England and we are somehow supposed to be impressed? I don't even know why it is called St. Valentine's Day—why not be honest and call it “Screw up everybody and everything Day” and call “King's X” and giggle a lot while we PRETEND we don't see the reality of the downfall of any type of moral society. The bottom line seems to be: “Go forth and screw or be screwed—and choose which you prefer first”.

We had a good T-A Fdn. meeting on Saturday and finally a bit of attention can be turned to the actual “cases” already involved as to “court orders” while the focus remains on who is and will be on the Board of Trustees after that annual April meeting. The big interest in, among the more naïve persons, is that “their” letter and offer to the United Nations' Kofi Annan had actually been sent to New York. The offer is outrageous but nearly as outrageous as the “limitations” and “regulations as in ‘requirements’ for the UN” which basically puts the Philippines in charge of the world. Not likely but “dream on”.

Nobody wants to do anything hazardous to individual health and since our focus and needs, along with joint-venture agreements, center around only a little part of the “estate”, it is not our prerogative to attend the nonsense to any great extent or reform land laws or thefts thereof.

Did the offer bear our names? No! We only acknowledged the Foundation Resolution allowing the representative to make such a letter of offer and thought that VK could really teach some good lessons to this little group to the tune of some $13 Trillion in various “offers” and, within the past five years, frauds.

Well, it is now a couple of hours later and past lunch and I have to eat many of my above words as we ventured out for a piece of chicken at Kenny Rogers and all the way to and fro and back through the market people were so sweet and yes, loving, and with us it can't be a “proposition”—just nice and truly caring and we are refreshed in that we found some just today worth our effort.

On Saturday when meeting at the Gilarmi we inquired as to the hotel's status and with some giggles and twittering we were told that Imelda Marcos was talking about buying the property and “it”. Good show! I believe Imelda Marcos and children are going to end up finding their places in the sun—AGAIN.

In reference to that particular Marcos involved in our orders to “recover the Marcos gold” as well as T-A holdings we find that THAT document is spurious (a lie) and we now go back to the REAL court document that refers to the full amount of the gold supposed to in the Central Bank as being back to 617,500 metric tons. It is no wonder they would prefer we not get in there!

It is worse for the government side because there was a case where the Government tried to get the whole asset and therefore pushed up the holdings even beyond the amounts in actual awarding because they thought there WAS NO WAY TO LOSE THE CASE—went through the Senate Blue Ribbon Committee, and everything. Of course they have buried the transcripts and hidden the “Position Papers” but it happened and THEY WERE RULED AGAINST!

Does this really “mean” anything? Oh indeed as the crabs eat one another while we hold in joint venture and corporation registrations with everyone applicable and now nearly two years MORE of documentation and good standing. Perhaps it does take time and more time to allow sequence of events to evolve.

It is remarkably serious here to see the efforts to precipitate happenings large enough to be able to bring again Martial Law. However, the last one who did that literally lost his head and that was Marcos. Everything was orchestrated by the U.S. and now it will be interesting to see a re-run of that which literally was the excuse for Marcos' fall in the lap of this criminal administration.

Could Arroyo pull out of this incredible bog? Oh yes, with our help—but the minute they allow “our help” the rats are uncovered and already some of them are missing their tails as the “farmer's wife” (so to speak) is “cutting off tails with a carving knife” (if I can remember my nursery rhymes).

The daily readings of the money financials as in “exchange” are pathetic and the reserve in the Philippines, always in dollars, is almost non-existent. “They” had to pour so many dollars into the exchange to hold the peso that from averaging a high volume of some 50 to 70 million dollars a day it has gone to AVERAGE a volume of $350 MILLION to half a billion DAILY. It appears someone(s) is really in tough circumstances and obviously outsiders [US??] have to pour in filler just to stay alive.

Something's gone terribly wrong with the seize everything and grabbit for the brokers and International Bankers at a penny on the dollar or worse as they keep “lending” more and upping the interest to the point there is NOTHING for running while all must go to debt payments—LIKE RIGHT NOW! Worse than anything are the actual terror tactics pushing everything into the fast lane of disaster. The European Union has declared no more investments due to the criminal and corrupt seizure by Arroyo of the Airport that Germany paid for, built and now is seized away, in total, from them along with no proper payoff of any kind.

God does not give us ability to see the “end” and that is wise indeed as we must evaluate our own actions at every juncture or activity along the way. WE KNOW THAT IF WE KEEP GOING WE WILL ACHIEVE—STOP AND WE WON'T—AND THAT IS A FOREKNOWN OUTCOME. Therefore, no matter how often the “stop and quit” hits the reality of knowing that either one precludes any goodly outcome and it is ever thus in our individual lives. I can't even dig out of the hundreds of pages of email, mailings and at least a new book a week—I can't catch up with the reading much the less do anything else. And yet when Cmdr. or Soltec or others write I find the confirmations that immediately flow back are comforting if not terrifying.

Weather is hot and sunny but the winds are enough to have cleared the city pretty well and from our view we can see across to the Bay and the little fisher-folk boats along with the “feed” houses at the fish farms which seem divided into sections much like farms and pastures. We know that from flying over those places to and from Hong Kong on visa renewal days. From upstairs they look like muddy flats that causes one to marvel at a fish being able to survive.

To friends who remain concerned about our “making it”: please know that we suspect God makes sure we only feel up to and can do what we are supposed to do and then keeps us from doing that which is wrong or out of sequence. If we feel good we want to push that river! If you can't easily make it across the street to the health store you are not apt to damage the river very much.

I thank Wayne Russey for giving permission to run excerpts from his last letter to us as he journeyed through “death's silly door” and lives to share and recognize purpose just a bit more acutely. God can get our attention if he really wants to do so and certainly without my nudging. Some events by their nature change the world and those walking through the wave or the desert are touched FOREVER and I believe that it is THAT which shall bring balance again into the well-being of life itself. I look out and see that we have diseased our world with cancers and poison and I certainly do believe that SHE WILL DO WHATEVER IT TAKES TO CLEANSE HERSELF AND PUT HER SYSTEMS TO RIGHT—OR AS OTHER PLANETS FAILED, PUT THIS ONE TO THE LONG SLEEP OF THE EONS IN SUCH A WAY AS TO NOT DAMAGE THE COSMIC SYSTEM OF ORBITING SOLAR SYSTEMS.

Are there parallel systems? I don't know because it surely appears to me, personally, that we are responsible for THIS ONE and thus we find whatever consequences might be appropriate for our walk through this space and time continuum. Our space suits are three-dimensioned while WE are forever.

To deal with “what is” I often have to interrogate myself because I am simply human wanting to do the human things appropriate to various stages in a lifespan. In those moments I consider in great sad drippings about why thus and so happened and am overwhelmed at the thousands of Swedish people lost in this Tsunami in the Indian Ocean area. Then I have to face it—the Tsunami was natural and “belonged” to the moment—what were all those tourists doing? Did they “belong” on the beaches in vacation? It doesn't matter, it simply IS and it represents “consequence” of actions—no more or less. I'll grant one thing in that the attitude may well seem a bit hard but how are you to deal with every event and consequence of everyone's actions? This is why I am totally convinced that a lot of BS has been going on about “saviors” and “raptures” that just are not so in any reasonable context other than manipulations of mindless brains stumbling around in their own unique space suits. How many did God really toss randomly into the tsunami back-wash? Right! None! It is the same concept as absurd as appeasing some volcano god by tossing in a Vestal Virgin or frying a sheep to burn on an altar of “control” and nonsense. It isn't good for the Virgin or the sheep. It makes “Macho Man” to be recognized for the coward he is in his places of power through force. Oh well, in this place it is pretty safe because I doubt there are many Vestal Virgins anywhere to be found. Heck, it is reason enough to not be a virgin at all and I think I may have discovered the meaning of this day of lust, etc.—especially in the Vestal.

We have enough confusion trying to shop for a little olive oil where we certainly don't want just olive oil but we have to have “virgin” olive oil—and NOW, goodness knows it must be extra or extra-extra virgin... Worse yet, the game is ongoing in the coconut oil business where you have to have the same guidelines. How do we tell if an olive or a coconut is a virgin? I think these misconceptions (pun intended) were around 2,000 years ago, also. Poor little Diana had to be a certified virgin but the same “Prince” now marries a certified non-virgin and we all rejoice in “true love” finding itself. Well, some people say they are “reptiles” anyway—whatever in the world that could possibly mean. Are we nuts or what?

May we truly care for one another so that tomorrow might not be quite so lonely in this journey. There truly is no freedom or liberty other than that which we have within our own minds for it surely IS a “state of being” and not some “right” of passage or nationality. We are all bond slaves to others, especially governments, who control us.

So much for the opinions of a Monday in the office. Love to all and pray for a good week for everyone of our relatives that our own blessings might be recognized. D.

WHEN STRESS GETS UNDER OUR SKIN

I had not intended to take more time from “hard-core” misery to talk about other Valentine Day activities and survival but of course, rightfully so, some are very interested in our “after the bomb” condition. Let me tell you that illicit sex fell into background interest at this computer.

So, first I am going to RE-TYPE for myself the message sent on that same day from Tom Taylor—before the stress really piled on: I am going to post it on my “to-study” every morning!

[QUOTING (but resources not known):]

STRESS MANAGEMENT

A lecturer, when explaining stress management to an audience, raised a glass of water and asked, “How heavy is this glass of water?” Answers called out ranged from 20 gm to 50 gm. The lecturer replied, “The absolute weight doesn’t matter, it depends on how long you try to hold it.”

“If I hold it for a minute, that’s not a problem. If I hold it for an hour, I’ll have an ache in my right arm. If I hold it for a day, you’ll have to call an ambulance. In each case, it’s the same weight, but the longer I hold it, the heavier it becomes.”

He concluded, “and that’s the way it is with stress management. If we carry our burdens all the time, sooner or later, as the burden becomes increasingly heavy, we won’t be able to carry on. As with the glass of water, you have to put it down for a while and rest before holding it again. When we’re refreshed, we can carry on with the burden.”

“So, before you return home tonight, put the burden of work down. Don’t carry it home. You can pick it up tomorrow. Whatever burdens you’re carrying now, let them down for a moment if you can. Relax; pick them up later after you’ve rested. Life is short—enjoy it.”

[D: Well, send for the ambulance, please, because that water glass is superglued to our backs, hands, feet and head.]

THEN HE SHARED SOME WAYS OF DEALING WITH THE BURDENS OF LIFE:

1. Accept that some days you’re the pigeon, and some days you’re the statue.
2. Always keep your words soft and sweet, just in case you have to eat them.
3. Always read stuff that will make you look good if you die in the middle of it.
4. Drive carefully, it’s not only cars that can be recalled by their maker.
5. If you can’t be kind, at least have the decency to be vague.
6. If you lend someone $20 and never see that person again, it was probably worth it.

7. Never buy a car you can’t push.
8. Never put both feet in your mouth at the same time, because then you won’t have a leg to stand on.
9. Nobody cares if you can’t dance well, just get up and dance.
10. Since it’s the early worm that gets eaten by the bird, sleep late.

Ok, with the above in mind I will certainly save time by referring to items by number, i.e.: #1: Today I’m the statue.

#2. Never mind the soft words just let me remember to not eat stringy meat to shove up my drilled-out tooth still awaiting that re-run with the “root canal” drill sergeant, etc., etc.

I find them all so appropriate that I know we all, you and us, have been there and done this.

People, some times this glass is just too heavy and that is even after the water has long evaporated. If, however, we drop it, it will surely break and cut our feet. So, we send out a prayer to God to send us a table to set the glass upon for a while and HE simply asks “which glass” and “what water”? “Is one less important than another?” No, but each must have priority and we can’t seem to turn off the faucets! Where does one go to get refreshed? Moreover, how often we wish it had only cost us $20 as in #6.

I had a good laugh at Wayne Russey’s recent comment which concluded with “poverty is a step up for us”. Yes, aren’t we all? And yet, somehow, we are supposed to “fix it” while I really can’t afford to fill my tooth.

I do have a couple of personal and direct comments for a couple of friends who offer so much more than we can fully have response.

No, we can’t use another water-machine. Two-by supplied us with a distiller and we rewired and rearranged the kitchen to house it only to short the circuits and find that we could buy “truly good” distilled water across the street for a lot cheaper. We also have to remember that distilled water has all the minerals removed and we have to add expensive supplements and then vortex the water to get a good suspension. It is just better to not spend precious funds on it—until life unfolds a lot further.

We cannot trust the bottled water but the distilled water tests better than we were getting stateside for our colloids. We boil heck out of everything anyway, add silver-gold colloid and go with it. We even wash our clothes in Oxi-treated water because we only have “cold” tap for that purpose.

How long will it be this way? Until it is different!

To Ellen, I have to note a thing or two along this journey relative to some of the recent writings where it was after the fact that we fully realized the location of so much of your family—along the Washington rift.

I WAS SO BUSY COUNTING BLESSINGS THAT YOU HAD NOT MOVED THERE AND WE COULD RELAX A BIT THAT THE LONG-RANGING FACTS FAILED TO REGISTER. WE TOO HAVE MANY OF OUR FAMILY RIGHT ALONG THAT U.S. WEST COAST AND NOT A THING WE CAN DO ABOUT IT. SO, I DID SET DOWN THAT GLASS. WE DO WHAT WE CAN, SHARE WHAT WE HAVE AND “ALLOW” OTHERS THEIR OWN WAY AND CHOICES.

We also find that “imminent” has meant, surely, not in this six years past. I do recognize that, however, this does put these probabilities six years closer on “this end”.

Absurdity hits every day in a dozen ways, i.e. there was a bombing down south in General Santos City on Valentine’s day and also on that day came a “4-point earthquake registering 6.2...”. Now this was reported in every paper so it must be so.

BOMBINGS

That does bring us to the topic of bombings and it gets less amusing ONLY to now find out that the damned government administration DID IT to hopefully bring down martial law under emergency powers. Sick? Well, yes of course!

Was it close to us, our friends inquire? Indeed, I can look right at the site without turning my head—right now. It was just across the “courtyard” (so to speak) as the crow flies less than two blocks. It had been a long and senseless day and at 7:50 P.M. the world blew up right here in Makati. I personally thought it was our building. EJ was meeting next door and of course I did the first proper thing—rush right out onto the balcony into the line of fire. This is much like rushing to the seashore watching the Tsunami.

But, in looking around it was easy to spot the war zone and billowing black smoke strewn with bus and body parts. Then as the days pass and truth comes forth you get so mad you can’t breathe—well, I can’t breathe well anyway so what the heck. The blast got three buses but the death rate was not nearly enough for where and how this thing happened right in the mid-rush hour on Valentine’s Day where the Light Rail Transit terminal was the adjacent structure—along with the Inter-Continental Hotel.

Golly-gee, the hit bus was demolished for blocks around—guttled and burned—ah but, only three deaths. The injured were bystanders and off the other buses. Facts are that the incident was so well planned as to have the bus just being emptied on the prior corner—as ordered and that alone had made the passengers totally furious—before the fact of the bomb that is.

Then wow, it just kept unfolding and unfolding. People swarmed the area and police couldn’t keep them out and that was interesting until it happened “by coincidence” that our majesty, Pres. GMA was RIGHT THERE ON THE SPOT. She claims that they were just going to have a regular Valentine’s Day family dinner at the Inter-Con and was just a tad late in arriving. She was right up to the bus for a photo-op with her “poor people”. Who are they kidding?

Not me any more!

They claimed there were other bombs waiting to go off and yet they allow the PRESIDENT to walk right up to the devastation? And today we expect martial law? I don't think so...! It is claimed now that it was Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG) along with doing a couple of other "Down South" bombings—or maybe al Qaeda or, of course, how could we forget—Bin Laden!

This is a purely Jewish Mossad trick of blowing selves up to make it appear somebody else is doing it. Will it work? We'll see, I suppose, as the whole of Mindanao is at war this morning. Sharif called yesterday just to "touch" as he had been in the beehive and just up and went home too weary and heartsick to bear it as "Heaven" seemed to have deserted us all. No, heaven has deserted no one—MAN HAS DONE IT AGAIN. Disinformation is pouring out every orifice.

Is there "hope"? Well, yes and perhaps on any given day that may appear to be ALL THERE IS—but yes, we are alive and THERE IS HOPE while the adversaries blow themselves away.

The economic ratings have been downgraded since yesterday and if nothing else is hopeless, the state of the nation IS and no, we can't do much about it until it is appropriate—except to get killed in the processing as this is the economic target of the nation—right in our dooryard. Oh well, it is also the only place we could possibly do this job so we just mind our business and keep out of the way and try to protect our contacts who share with us. Being journalists certainly helps our cause.

THE HIGH PRIESTS OF WAR

Ok, change the topic to one of far worse nerve-jangling, The High Priests of War by our beloved Michael Collins Piper. YOU WILL NEVER BE THE SAME AFTER YOU READ IT AND, IF YOU STUDY IT CAREFULLY, YOU WILL RECOGNIZE EVERY LAST PLAYER INCLUDING OUR OWN BLIND SELVES—EVEN AFTER 18 YEARS OF WRITING UNTIL MY FINGERS ARE NUBBIES.

Cmdr. is asking that the book be made available through Phoenix Source and I am asking you to each and all get a copy and pass it out. I don't know if we can get a price break today but we will also ask if we can "series" it but please, don't let down this writer because "stayin' alive" is harder and harder for all of us who are now bled completely DRY. I am asking appropriate persons to make arrangements for some copies for distribution and make the announcement when available.

As an aside from years ago when I first stumbled into writing I immediately made it to the top of Kissinger's hit list. Now, I was as skeptical as any of you until facts came into better focus and the actual attacks hit like daisy-cutter bombs. I hardly even knew who Kissinger might be much the less why he might be annoyed with "me". Now I guess all his buddies are equally annoyed with us and if we stay in Manila while they destroy the U.S. and places elsewhere, we probably will "make it". That, we KNOW, is not because of "little old us'ns". This is why, however, we have learned to hand over that heavy glass of water to the guys upstairs and hide our space suits behind the flight crew who directs the program at hand.

Can we make it through? Well, if anyone has any better ideas than just "doing it", we are open for suggestions but so far it has been less than helpful. The suggestions we have had will simply get us stopped and dead and we are not in favor of such outcome. We have also had to realize that with the program as it is unfolding that our own realization of projects, etc., will have to be quite carefully handled to keep us all out of the line of fire and in that we will have to "succeed", convert assets to "gold actually held" in Monex or somewhere and go from there as to projects, paybacks, etc. We do not even try to fool ourselves as to ease or "comfort" but we know the way if we get the opportunity.

As to you who are simply out of patience with us and this mountain we are climbing, we can only offer condolences and ask you to get in line. And please go back to #3 and consider reading HIGH PRIESTS OF WAR so you look good if you die in the middle of it. They can't kill you "twice"—that only happens with suiciding where a man commits suicide by shooting himself in the head two or three times with his same gun.

The remainder of this month should certainly be interesting. I'll just put the putty back around the windows—none broken so all is not lost—and wait for the next shoe to drop. The U.S., UK, Australia and other countries on that list of "white-eyes" are warned away from here and if here—do not travel—ANYWHERE. Ok with me and perhaps the just "set the glass down" and go back to bed is the best idea so far—perchance we WILL have a tomorrow.

Oh and by the way, as we consider some of the comments by the Jewish hecklers that we somehow land on them pretty heavy—it is that we can't be selective, for we are journalists and have a paper where we print what is available—from the Elephant Shivas to the Ramtha, WHAT THE BLEEP IS RAMTHA? We get accused and drawn into the sucking parasites as being some kind of group, cult or some other deranged something or other—SORRY ABOUT THAT, we are NONE OF THE ABOVE.

I can't even keep up with the ongoing Passion of the Christ as presented by, but not even honorably mentioned at the awards by Gibson. I didn't see it because I could not bring myself to witness one more whack by the murderer's whip. I do note, however, that there is due a release again during Easter so may get up some courage for a "downer" if it comes across that big deep sea. I note that the truth of Bush didn't get awards either so I guess some people have to try harder, Mr. Moore as in Michael.

It appears to me that the Jewish cabal has worked so diligently to prevail in this world order that they would actually be proud to have notice of their accomplishments. I fully intend to stay out of their way as much as is possible.

I will ask that for fair-press we run the Ramtha material just received in the paper first opportunity and hope the 35,000 year old warrior is not offended. He describes himself as a "barbarian" and so why do we act surprised that he IS? Some of those old souls come back, I understand, as monkeys, elephants, rats, Jews and Christians. Wow! May you just walk ever with the Angels in a most discerning manner. And as for the pigeons please remember that bird poop (GUANO) is the best fertilizer on the planet and whole restructuring of a planet can be built on just the by-products of that product so today I may be the statue but who knows, tomorrow I may actually be the pigeon.

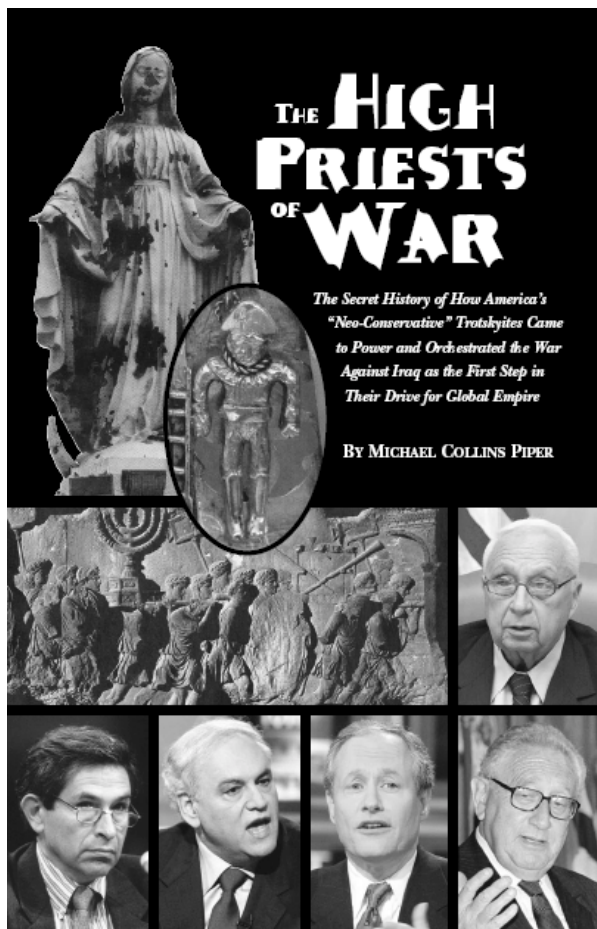

Love and best insights, D.

ABOUT THE COVER . . .

At the top left is an image of a statue of the Virgin Mary which an Israeli army tank fired upon on March 14, 2002, shattering the nose and slicing off the hands. The hated statue stood high above the Roman Catholic Holy Family Hospital and Orphanage in Jerusalem adjacent to a Vatican flag. The Israelis fired on the statue at close range. It was not an accident. It was an act of hatred.

And hatred likewise is expressed in the violent image of the hanging of Haman, taken from a Jewish religious artifact. One of the first of many enemies of the Jewish people, Haman's assassination by execution is celebrated on the holiday of Purim, which—just coincidentally, it is said—marked the onslaught of the war against Iraq, a point noted in Jewish newspapers that referred to Saddam Hussein as a modern-day Haman.

At middle-level left is a relief from Rome's Arch of Titus, recalling the sacking of Jerusalem by the Romans and the triumphant seizure of the Jewish temple's menorah.

The fall of Jerusalem—one of the great disasters of Jewish history—was another of the endless series of events marking the conflict of the Middle East that is still being fought out today.

At mid-level right is Ariel Sharon, the brutal Israeli caesar whose hard-line policies against the Christian and Muslim Palestinian Arabs are highly popular among his fellow countrymen and much admired by most American Jewish leaders and their allies in the neo-conservative movement, despite significant grass-roots Jewish opposition notwithstanding.

Sharon's goal of achieving "Greater Israel" is part and parcel of the neo-conservative agenda and the ultimate in hate and imperialism.

At the bottom, from left to right, are Paul Wolfowitz, Richard Perle, William Kristol and Henry Kissinger, perhaps the most powerful figures in the neo-conservative network that orchestrated the tragic U.S. war against Iraq. The neo-conservative High Priests of War dream of establishing a world empire and intend to use America's young people as the cannon fodder to accomplish their goal.

That is hate—and we must fight hate.

The High Priests of War

Part One: Introduction

FOREWORD: Authority Without Responsibility...

Although much has recently been written about the intrigues of the neo-conservatives who rule the roost in the administration of George W. Bush, The High Priests of War is by far the most comprehensive work on the subject available today, particularly in that it explores the neo-conservative agenda from a highly important historic perspective that has generally been ignored in the heat of current debate.

It can accurately be said that the author, Michael Collins Piper, was one of the first journalists on the face of the planet to have recognized the neo-conservative infiltration of the upper ranks of the American political and intelligence mechanisms and then—as far back as the early 1980s—began writing about the phenomenon.

Piper duly credits our mutual longtime friend and colleague, the late Andrew St. George—to whom this book is dedicated—with having pioneered the first significant news reportage on the neo-conservatives, and it can rightly be said that St. George is the literary “godfather” of this important book.

Tackling the most important political problem of our age and skillfully analyzing its origins, naming names and describing the agenda and the misdeeds of the highly astute and closely inter-connected group which is dexterously pulling the strings that manipulate the marionettes on the political stage, The High Priests of War is a landmark work.

The neo-conservatives have accomplished the supreme political feat: They have the authority but not the responsibility for the disastrous course of American history, immune to their misdeeds and the responsibility therefor, thanks to their controlled press.

Thus, as our country reels from disaster to disaster, the public is either told by the press how wonderful it all is or replaceable politicians are blamed for it while the neocons only tighten their hold. This sordid scenario is unknown to all but a tiny handful of American patriots. If a significant number of Americans can be awakened to the political reality described by Michael Collins Piper so clearly in this book, the exposure alone will put an end to the conspiracy.

PREFACE

Although most—but certainly not all—American anti-communists were sincere, it is vital to now face the sad and uncomfortable truth: The Cold War was largely a fraud.

While the average American was being told to fear the Soviet Union, America’s biggest bankers and industrialists were engaged in extensive trade and other lucrative deals with the Communist Party bosses. And the U.S. government itself was making vast amounts of defense technology and other data available to our purported rival. So yes, the Cold War was very much a fraud.

To finally understand and accept that difficult reality makes it possible for us to reassess the globalist could match.

Andrew’s first-on-the-scene reportage exposed the neo-conservatives as the genuine menace to world peace that they are.

—MICHAEL COLLINS PIPER

A United States Senator Speaks Out: Why Americans are really dying in Iraq ...

“With 760 dead in Iraq and over 3,000 maimed for life, home folks continue to argue why we are in Iraq—and how to get out ... Even President Bush acknowledges that Saddam Hussein had nothing to do with 9-11 ... Of course there were no weapons of mass destruction. Israel’s intelligence, Mossad, knows what’s going on in Iraq. They are the best. They have to know. Israel’s survival depends on knowing. Israel long since would have taken us to the weapons of mass destruction if there were any or if they had been removed. With Iraq no threat, why invade a sovereign country? The answer: President Bush’s policy to secure Israel.”

—U.S. Senator Ernest F. Hollings (D-S.C.)
The Charleston Post and Courier
May 6, 2004

(For making these forthright remarks, in a column in which he also specifically named several of the “high priests of war” described in this book, Sen. Hollings—a longtime friend of the U.S. military—was harshly denounced by the Anti-Defamation League and a host of politicians eager to curry favor with the Israeli lobby. Yet, just shortly before, a respected Jewish newspaper, Forward, stated that Israel had benefited from the Iraq war—“uniquely” it said—and that Israeli intelligence had provided information used by the Bush administration to justify the invasion of Iraq. See below for what Forward said.)

Leading Jewish Newspaper Explains: Israel “uniquely benefited” from Iraq war ...

“On the eve of the war, Israel was a quiet but enthusiastic supporter of America’s war plans. Saddam Hussein’s military power, it was universally agreed, made him one of the Jewish state’s most dangerous adversaries ... His overthrow was seen as eliminating Israel’s most serious existential threat ... [and Israel] eagerly cooperated ... sharing information on Iraqi capabilities and intentions ... meant to help the American action... But because Israel uniquely benefited from a war that is increasingly controversial in America and around the world, fears of speaking out have grown even stronger than they were before the war.”

THE HIGH PRIESTS OF WAR

The Secret History of How America’s “Neo-Conservative” Trotskyites Came to Power and Orchestrated the War Against Iraq as the First Step in Their Drive for Global Empire

By Michael Collins Piper

DEDICATION

To the one and only ANDREW ST. GEORGE

ANDREW ST. GEORGE
OCTOBER 25, 1923 – MAY 2, 2001

—The fearless journalist who pioneered coverage of the strange intrigues of the neo-conservative warmongers long before they came to be acknowledged by the major media as front-line players on the global stage.

A valued friend and a memorable figure, a raconteur like no other, a bon vivant and a loving husband and proud father, Andrew was a mentor with a track record as an international correspondent few madness of the last 50 years and to prepare for the real battle for survival that lies ahead.

Until Americans are finally prepared to acknowledge that the anticommunist frenzy to which so many devoted their energies was effectively so misdirected and fruitless, there is no sense in fighting any further. For generations we were fighting perceived “enemies” abroad, but the real enemy was here at home—infiltrating and seizing power in the upper ranks of the American national security and intelligence apparatus. As evidence put forth in this book makes clear, the Soviet threat—however great it may have been at one point in time—was, in more recent decades, clearly on the downward spiral, its strength diminishing. However, the neo-conservative forces, eager to exploit fears of Soviet power in order to play out their own parochial agenda, were exaggerating both Soviet military might and Soviet intentions. And it must be said, quite correctly, that the foundation of the neo-conservative agenda—from the beginning—was not just the security, but also the imperial advancement, of the state of Israel.

We must abandon the archaic rhetoric of the past and focus on the real threat to America—and to the sovereignty of all nations and peoples: the PREFACE power-mad imperial forces that are bent on using American resources and military might to enforce a global police state under the control of a select few: the international elite and their bought-and-paid-for politicians, unprincipled bureaucrats, and the media shills who glorify and attempt to popularize the agenda of the would-be rulers of a Global Plantation that its proponents have stylized as the New World Order. Although The Spotlight was quite on the mark when it dared to suggest, upon the fall of the Soviet empire, that “communism is dead”, there were those relentless hold-outs who refused to face it. “Oh no,” cried the John Birchers, “communism isn’t really dead. It’s just a ruse. The reds are going underground, just waiting for the opportunity to strike.” The Birchers and their like-minded throwbacks still believe that Josef Stalin is hiding in a Kremlin closet, ready to jump out and say “Boo.” Yet, ironically, only now are the Birchers coming to recognize that the neo-conservatives—whom they promoted for years in the pages of their journals such as Review of the News and The New American—are hardly conventional “conservative patriots” in any sense of the term.

The same crowd that rattled its sabers against “the communist threat” has now begun to substitute “the Islamic threat” as the new danger to be vanquished. This comes as no surprise. For years, during the Cold War, American “conservatives” (especially the Birchers) freely (and falsely) declared repeatedly that the Palestine Liberation Organization was part of a “Soviet-backed terror network”, the facts notwithstanding. And if truth be told, it is no accident that these myths about the PLO received their widest propagation in the writings of a pro-Israel neo-conservative ideologue, Claire Sterling, whose now-infamous “study”, The Terror Network, became the virtual bible of the Israeli lobby in its campaign to discredit the Palestinian nationalist cause.

Now, in the name of “fighting terrorism”, the conservative anti-communist stalwarts have lent their support to the establishment of a police state here at home as a way of “safeguarding liberty”. In this regard, note that more than 50 years ago—in the early days of the Cold War—that ex-CIA man William F. Buckley, Jr., the soon-to-be self-appointed “leader” of the American “conservative” movement, laid it on the line. Writing in Commonweal on January 25, 1952 Buckley said that he was willing to support “Big Government” for “the duration [MCP: of the Cold War] because—he proclaimed—only “a totalitarian bureaucracy within our shores” could assure total victory over the communist menace. The anti-communist Cold War is now over, but the anti-Islamic (so-called “anti-terrorist”) Hot War is now under way. And here on American shores we have a new Department of Homeland Security aiming to run roughshod on American liberties all in the guise of protecting those liberties. Why should we be surprised?

The “communist threat” never lay within the Communist Party USA which, as American Free Press pointed out, was controlled at the highest levels by Morris Childs, an asset of J. Edgar Hoover’s FBI: A Russian-born Zionist, Childs soured on Soviet-style communism when he detected the echoes of traditional Russian nationalism under Stalin. No, the Communist Party USA was never a threat, although Hoover—a longtime ally of the Zionist Anti-Defamation League—was manipulating the tiny party for the covert agenda of his behind-the-scenes “advisors”. Nor did the communist threat lie even within the furthest “liberal” reaches of the Democratic Party. It was not the New Deal or the Fair Deal or Camelot or the Great Society—or Clintonism—that brought a unique updated American-style brand of Bolshevism of the Trotskyite bent to America. Instead, it was the “compassionate conservatism” of the man seriously being hailed as “the New Ronald Reagan”: George W. Bush. It is no coincidence that—just days into the war against Iraq—the “official” American organ of the Trotskyites—Partisan Review—closed its doors. In truth, the little intellectual journal now had no more reason to exist, for its aim of securing power had been accomplished through the proverbial “back door”.

This book presents a brief but detailed overview of the intrigues of the neo-conservatives. Much more could be written, but it would perhaps belabor the point. Nonetheless, it seems appropriate to conclude, at this juncture, by saying quite simply:

It’s Time to Declare War on the High Priests of War ...

—MICHAEL COLLINS PIPER

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Secret History of How America’s “Neo-Conservative” Trotskyites Came to Power and Orchestrated the War Against Iraq as the First Step in Their Drive for Global Empire

The report that follows is based on this foundation:

THAT the war against Iraq being waged by the American administration of President George W. Bush is not only contrary to traditional “conservative” American principles, but contrary to all principles of American foreign policy during the last half-century;

THAT the war against Iraq is being waged for far more broad-ranging purposes than “regime change” or “eliminating weapons of mass destruction”; first and foremost, as part of an overall effort to establish the United States as the sole international super-power, capable military and economically, to suppress any nations and/or peoples who dare to challenge American hegemony;

THAT the war against Iraq is simply a first step in a long-standing, wide-ranging plan to launch an even more aggressive move against the entire Arab Middle East in order to “remake the Arab world” to secure the survival of—and expand the power of—the state of Israel;

THAT the war against Iraq is only the initial target of this carefully planned scheme and that, ultimately, other Arab and Muslim states are slated for outright extinction or some form of occupation or control by American military and political forces (in alliance with Israel);

THAT the war against Iraq and the plan for the subjugation of the Arab people is quite simply a modified, modernized adaptation of the historic Zionist dream of “Greater Israel”, adjusted to meet the demands of the international oil companies, which are, in turn, fully prepared to share the aim of dominating the oil-producing states of the Arab world in partnership with the state of Israel;

THAT the war against Iraq was deliberately orchestrated by a small but powerful network of hard-line “right wing” Zionist elements—the self-styled “neo-conservatives”—at the highest levels of the Bush administration, skillfully aided and abetted by like-minded persons in public policy organizations, think tanks, publications and other institutions, all of which are closely interconnected and, in turn, linked to hard-line “Likudnik” forces in Israel;

THAT the war against Iraq and the additional moves by the United States against the Arab world that are slated to follow can be traced to Zionist political intrigue inside the upper levels of the U.S. intelligence community, reaching as far back as the early 1970s, and that many of the same players involved in that activity are now guiding Bush administration policy today;

THAT the war against Iraq is an adjunct to the previously declared “war against terrorism” which was, in itself, part of a long-evolving and carefully coordinated propaganda campaign founded on the theory that terrorism is somehow an “Arab” trait.

This report will examine all of these aspects, citing a wide variety of sources, and will focus largely on given facts that have received wide circulation in the “mainstream” English-language press in the United States. The facts will speak for themselves. At any time this report delves into speculation or opinion, such views will be duly noted or otherwise clearly apparent.

Mindanao and the Int'l Politics of Oil

As mentioned in this issue's headline article, the Philippines just might have the largest oil reserves in Asia. As we know, China has a voracious appetite for oil, as does the U.S. With thanks to The Daily Tribune, we turn to the writing of Alejandro Lichauco for some insights.

MINDANAO AND THE INT'L POLITICS OF OIL
Alejandro Lichauco, The Daily Tribune, 2/10/05

Mindanao is complicated enough but it could become complicated even more by opening it up, as this government has done, to the international politics of oil.

The Middle East is proof enough of what oil can do to underdeveloped economies—like Iraq, for example. There's no other commodity in the world that can bring instant riches to an impoverished country, but there is also no other commodity that can bring about political turmoil where there was none. And particularly so in these times. That is because oil is one commodity the international demand for which has never been greater and when a poor country with political leaders prone to what the late Claro M. Recto called "double allegiance" is discovered to have oil underneath its grounds, then that country could be in for trouble and oil can prove to be more of a curse than a blessing.

Again, remember Iraq, for Iraq is about oil, not about bringing democracy to a land long under the heels of a dictator whom the U.S. government had long supported.

And Mindanao is where the oil is—and big oil at that. As far back as 1992, satellites of the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration or NASA, pinpointed Mindanao as holding "Asia's largest oil deposits". This according to a story which appeared in the March 24, 1992 issue of the Bulletin.

In that story titled "Mindanao Oil Deposits Eyed" and written under the by-line of Priscila Arias, we are informed that "After five years of continuous studies on oil veins extending from various countries of Asia by Volco Phils., a U.S. oil exploring firm, it was found that Asia's largest oil deposits are in Mindanao."

The reported source of the story was no less than Adolf Azcuna, "a former presidential executive assistant".

Azcuna, according to the story, also said "Domco International, an oil firm affiliated with Volco, agreed to provide $200 million for the development of natural gas in Mindanao."

It is in the context of that information that Filipinos should perhaps read developments in Mindanao over the last 10 years or so. When the Marcos regime ended, Mindanao was very much at peace, the secession problem being marginalized as a problem of the past. Why the problem should have resurrected after Edsa has long been a question in the minds of many, and the answer to that question might well lie in oil.

Oil in brief, as history has shown, is one commodity that attracts the greed not only of the international powers but of the international oil companies which are virtually governments in themselves and that should be enough to alert us to the double-edged prospects opened up by the decision of this government to open up the country to international interests engaged in the business of oil.

Mindanao has been put on the auction block and bidding for it are now the two main protagonists in contention over control of Southeast Asia, namely, U.S. and China.

We know of course that American oil and mining companies had long been involved in Mindanao. But last week a new dimension was added to the picture. And that is the decision of a Chinese energy and mining company to explore the possibilities of oil in the Davao-Agusan basin. This according to a business story in one of the nation's papers, titled "China Starts Davao Oil Exploration".

Considering the insatiable demand for oil and minerals now driving China's foreign policy and considering also the intense geopolitical rivalry between China and the U.S., it shouldn't take much to see in these developments something to be troubled about.

It could well be, bye bye Mindanao.

Mr. Lichauco also has some interesting thoughts to share with regard to the developing non-Western Alliance, which we have previously documented as including Brazil and most of South America:

JAPAN DRAWN INTO CHINA-RUSSIA-INDIA ALLIANCE?
Alejandro Lichauco, The Daily Tribune, 2/17/05

Easily the most fascinating diplomatic development of the week is the story on the evolving relationship between Russia and Japan and how, as the title of the story put it, the "China factor brings" two former foes (Russia and Japan) together.

The story was written by James Brooke of the Times News Service and the main theme is best expressed by a remark attributed by the story to Toshiyuki Shikata, a military analyst at Tokyo University.

According to Shikata, as quoted by Brooke: "As long as Japan and Russia are in cooperation, China will not be able to move against us (Japan)." The story then proceeds to observe that Shikata's view is "echoing a rapidly emerging view in Tokyo".

It's no secret that Japan—a nation bereft of natural resource—salivates over prospects of exploiting the immense oil and gas deposits in Eastern Russia and, as the story reports it, "Japan has lobbied Moscow successfully to build an oil pipeline in the Sea of Japan, skirting China."

No secret either that Russia is in great need of the kind of capital and technology that Japan can contribute to Russia's overall development, particularly of the latter's immense but untapped natural wealth. So the need is mutual and that's what has finally drawn the two former "foes" to each other.

But that's not what really intrigues. The drawing together is the most natural thing in the world, as natural as the drawing together of the U.S. and Japan, or the drawing together of the U.S. and Germany, all former foes.

What intrigues is the interpretation given to that drawing together by the Tokyo University military analyst Shikata as well as by Prof. Michael Austin of Yale University.

Shikata, as mentioned, welcomes the growing economic cooperation between his country and Russia as something of an assurance that China won't move against Japan. The interpretation reinforces the theme advanced by this writer in a piece he wrote Monday ("The New Cold War...") to the effect that Russia and China, together with India, are now in a "strategic alliance". That being so, an ally of Russia, as Japan is turning out to be, could then translate into an ally of China, which would then make the "strategic alliance" one that would include Japan.

In brief, what started out as a strategic alliance between the three nuclear powers that are Russia, China and India would seem to be evolving toward a strategic alliance that would include the most powerful economy in Asia, and the second-largest in the world.

That this is bound to create panic in Washington can't be doubted. At least, if the "thinkers" of the Bush administration are really thinking, they should see in the remarks of Tokyo University's Shikata one more evidence of the increasing isolation of the United States.

Recall that Russia, China, India and Japan share a common experience in terms of their relationship with the U.S. All four have had turbulent and even traumatic relationships with the United States. If it's difficult to imagine, "Moscow forgiving Washington" for having engineered the dissolution of the Soviet Union, it's just as difficult to imagine Tokyo forgiving Washington for the atomic holocaust that was dropped on Hiroshima. In the case of India, one doubts whether that country will easily forget the way its great leader Jawaharlal Nehru was demonized by the U.S. throughout the Cold War for the alliance that he struck with the Soviet Union. And as for China, well, we all know the state of that country's relationship with the U.S.

So panic there is bound to be in Washington and nowhere is that state of panic more evident than in the interpretation given by Prof. Austin of Yale University.

Prof. Austin, as quoted by the story, attributes the growing cooperation between Russia and Japan as a function or result of what he describes as "China's effort to achieve regional supremacy".

The trouble with that analysis is it assumes, rather unconvincingly, that Russia is disturbed and therefore opposed to China's "effort to achieve regional supremacy" in Asia. The analysis seems farfetched and because it is farfetched, it suggests an effort to sow intrigue between Russia and China, and that, this piece takes it, is convincing indication enough that there, indeed, is panic in U.S. circles over the evolving character of the strategic alliance between the foes of the U.S.

A strong China in the region could translate into something positive for its strategic allies and the U.S. would only have itself to blame for that.

The danger for the Philippines, of course—and for the world—is that the cowboy and his gang of three—Rumsfeld, Wolfowitz and the U.S. Vice President—just might attempt to blow China up before it does become the real power in the region and the world for that matter.

But that would be a danger for America too and that danger won't escape many thoughtful and powerful elements in the U.S. who will know what to do with the cowboy and his gang of three.

Controversial Letter Hits Jewish Extremism

Russian President Vladimir Putin has taken great pains to avoid any appearance of being “anti-Semitic” (which in truth would be pretty difficult since he appears to be a direct descendant of Shem, as opposed to Japheth), even putting in appearances at synagogues from time to time and attending the Auschwitz ceremony this year to accept thanks for Russian participation in liberation of the labor camp.

Just because many of the nomenklatura (elite, oligarchs) happened to be Jewish, however, this did not prevent prosecution for criminal conduct, even in cases where the individuals might hold dual (Russian-Israeli) citizenship. In other words, correct judgment is based on actions.

Recently, some five hundred influential Russians, including nineteen members of the Duma (state assembly) and numerous newspaper editors, presented a highly controversial letter to the Procurator General of Russia, seeking to suppress hate crimes by Jews (!!!). The Duma subsequently voted to “condemn” the letter but stopped short of taking any action against its signatories..

First we will look at Jewish reaction to the letter, then we will present the letter in its entirety so readers can evaluate “Just the facts, ma’am.”

THE GREAT HATE DEBATE

Walter Ruby, The Jewish Week, 2/11/05

Leaders of the fractious Jewish community in Russia are taking opposing positions on whether a vote last week by the lower house of Russia’s parliament to condemn an overtly anti-Semitic statement signed by 19 of its members amounts to progress in the fight against anti-Jewish bigotry.

Yet four major Jewish leaders—Chief Rabbis Berel Lazar and Adolf Shayevich; Vladimir Slutsker, president of the Russian Jewish Congress; and Mikhail Chlenov, secretary general of the Eurasian Jewish Congress—agreed in separate phone interviews that the recent upsurge of anti-Semitism in Russia is more intense than anything since the mid-1990s. They said it has caused deep worry among the estimated 500,000 Jews living in Russia.

Rabbi Lazar and Slutsker, the two pre-eminent Jewish leaders in the country, praised Russian President Vladimir Putin as a staunch and indispensable ally of the Jewish community in the fight against anti-Semitism. But Rabbi Shayevich, a bitter rival of Rabbi Lazar, said Slutsker is “too close” to Putin to be an effective advocate for Jewish concerns or in the struggle for human rights and democracy, which many in Russia and abroad believe Putin himself to be imperiling.

About the Duma vote, Rabbi Lazar, a Chabadnik who has been in Moscow since 1989 and heads the most powerful Jewish umbrella body in Russia, the Federation of Russian Jewry, or FIOR, said, “There is no question this is a step forward. Much more needs to be done, but it is very positive the letter was repudiated by the Duma.”

Rabbi Lazar said Russian Jews are “certainly worried” by the anti-Semitic outbreak of recent weeks, “but aren’t running for the door. In many ways, things are worse in France and other European countries than here.”

But Chlenov said, “There is a widespread impression among many Jews here that the vote by the Duma accomplished nothing, since it is now clear that there will be no substantive action taken against the deputies who signed the letter.”

About 500 individuals signed the letter, which appeared Jan. 13 on the website of the St. Petersburg newspaper Rus Pravoslavnaya. The 19 Duma deputies who signed were all from the Communist Party and the nationalist, pro-Putin party Rodina.

The letter asked Prosecutor General Vladimir Ustinov to launch proceedings “on the prohibition in our country of all religious and ethnic Jewish organizations as extremist”.

Its publication and repudiation by the Duma come amid a series of events over the past month that have made anti-Semitism a hot story in Moscow. The events include the brutal beating of a leading Jewish religious activist, Rabbi Alexander Lakshin, while walking on the street near Chabad’s Marina Rosche synagogue, and two television discussion programs aired in the past week that allowed several signers of the letter to propound anti-Semitic theories to millions of viewers.

After the first program, K’Baryer, a Crossfire-style debate, was shown Feb. 3, some 53 percent of the more than 100,000 viewers who called the station maintained that Albert Makashov, a Communist Party deputy who has long revelled in unabashed anti-Jewish rhetoric, got the better of his debate opponent, Aleksei Leonov, a former cosmonaut who denounced Makashov for ethnic incitement.

During the second TV program, Vremina, two other Duma members who signed the anti-Semitic letter, Alexander Krutov and Sergei Supko, asserted that the Shulchan Aruch insults Christians and demanded that the procurator-general investigate whether such incitement is taking place in Jewish religious schools where the Shulchan Aruch, the Code of Jewish Law, is studied.

All major Jewish bodies were quick to condemn the letter and its signatories. Several Jewish leaders, including Slutsker, Chlenov and Rabbi Shayevich, promised to open legal proceedings against its signers.

Russian Jews have complained for years that the country’s legal authorities are less than ardent about prosecuting purveyors of hate speech despite an article in the Constitution that makes it a crime to incite religious or ethnic hatred. [JJ: Apparently, such a crime was not committed.]

The Jewish leadership was relieved when Putin, on a trip to Poland to participate in ceremonies marking the liberation of Auschwitz, said he was “ashamed of the manifestations of anti-Semitism in Russia”, adding: “No one has the right to be indifferent toward anti-Semitism, xenophobia and racial intolerance.”

Under pressure from the Putin administration, the Duma voted Feb. 4 by 306-58 to adopt a declaration stating that the “clear anti-Semitic intent” of the Jan. 13 letter “prompts indignation and sharp condemnation”. The Duma declaration said it was “particularly sorrowful” that the letter came as the world mourned the victims of Auschwitz, adding that the consequences of such initiatives “could be extremely dangerous for a multiethnic state like Russia”.

Yet the night before the vote, Makashov staunchly defended the letter on K’Baryer. The show’s host, Vladimir Solovyov, who is Jewish, defended the invitation to Makashov by contending that it is important to expose the issue of anti-Semitism instead of allowing it to fester.

Yet Chlenov, the founder of the Vaad, the first official Jewish organization in the Soviet Union back in 1989, said the TV debate helped Makashov spread his anti-Jewish libels before an audience of millions.

“The fact that 53 percent of viewers felt Makashov won the debate does not necessarily mean they are all anti-Semites, but also reflects the fact that Makashov is a dynamic debater, whereas Leonov was quite weak,” Chlenov said.

On Vremina, with veteran talk show host Vladimir Posner, Slutsker countered Krutov’s attack on the Shulchan Aruch. Slutsker, a wealthy businessman, pro-Putin member of the Senate and student of kabbalah, pointed out that statements asserting Jewish superiority to non-Jews in the ancient text were made vis-a-vis pagans [JJ: Reminder: “Gentiles” are all who are not “Jews”, so this isn’t much of a refutation—and yet it is the ONLY refutation of facts provided in this Jewish Week response.] and not Christians, as Krutov asserted.

...Rabbi Shayevich believes “there is a connection” between Putin’s anti-democratic measures and the recent anti-Semitic revival, and he criticized Rabbi Lazar for not speaking out more forcefully.

“Rabbi Lazar is too close to power,” said Rabbi Shayevich, who was Russia’s lone chief rabbi before Putin appointed Rabbi Lazar and began a policy of favoring FIOR over Rabbi Shayevich and the RJC. “Rabbi Lazar always defends the president, as long as he doesn’t go directly against the Jewish community. For my part I have criticized the president’s policy on Chechnya and the government’s cutting back on social benefits to pensioners.”

Chlenov, who believed the Duma members were encouraged to publish their anti-Semitic letter by the authoritarian climate created by Putin, said: “The reality is that there is no consensus in the Jewish community on the issue of authoritarianism, yet there definitely is a consensus on anti-Semitism. The Jewish community is determined to press the authorities to crack down on those who spread ethnic hatred.”...

THE CONTROVERSIAL LETTER:
'JEWISH GOOD FORTUNE—RUSSIAN TEARS'

Representatives of Russian society demand from the Procurator General of the Russian Federation the suppression of illegal propagation of Jewish national and religious extremism.

Dear Mr. Procurator General:

On 18 December 2003 the President of the Russian Federation, Vladimir V. Putin, brought up the following statistics in the course of a televised address: In 1999 there were four convictions under article 282 of the Russian Federation Criminal Code on inciting inter-ethnic hatred. In 2000 there were 10. And in 2003 “more than 60 criminal investigations were made into cases of inciting inter-ethnic discord. Of these, 20 cases went to court and guilty verdicts were handed down in 17-20 cases.”

Who is shouting, “Stop, thief!”?

The overwhelming majority of these cases are initiated by Jewish activists or organizations, who charge their defendants with the “anti-Semitism”. But the overwhelming majority of those accused and convicted are Russian patriots. Now they have been joined by the well-known independent politician and pamphleteer, the former head of Goskompechat (the State Publishing Commission) B. S. Mironov.

We recognize that the statements of Russian patriots regarding Jews frequently have a sharply negative and excessively emotional character, unacceptable in public discussion, and constitute what the law regards as extremism. None of the above-mentioned trials, however, ever examined the reason for this sharpness, the original source of this extremism in the given inter-ethnic conflict.

Indeed the chief problem that must be elucidated in investigations and trials is: Do the sharply negative assessments of the Jews by Russian patriots correspond in essence to the truth about the Jews (against whom they are directed) or do they not? If they do not correspond to the truth about the Jews, then the discussion can deal with the defamation of Jews and with the incitement of religious and inter-ethnic discord. But if they do correspond to the truth, then such assessments, apart from and independent of their emotionalism, cannot be qualified as defamatory, as incitement to discord, and the like. (For example, to say a decent person is a criminal is defamatory to him; but to name someone who has committed a crime a criminal—this is a truthful statement of facts.)

Furthermore, since there are two sides in this inter-ethnic conflict (the accuser and the accused), it follows that one must clear up: which of the sides actually started this conflict in the first place and was responsible for it, and whether the actions of the accused might not be acts of self-defense in response to acts of aggression by the accusing side?

We ask you to verify, Mr. Procurator General, that on these matters there is a large quantity of universally recognized facts and sources from around the world, on the basis of which it is possible to draw the indisputable conclusion that: the Russian patriots' negative assessments of typical Jewish qualities and actions with respect to non-Jews correspond to truth; it being known that these actions are not chance occurrences, but are prescribed in Judaism and have been practiced for two millennia. Thus, the incriminating statements and publications made by patriots against the Jews constitute self-defense, which may not always be correct in terms of style, but remains nevertheless justified in essence.

The Morality of Jewish Fascism

To corroborate this, we draw your attention to the book Kitsur Shulkhan Arukh officially published in Moscow in 2001 by the Congress of Jewish Religious Organizations and Associations in Russia (KEROOR). This is a condensed version of the Jewish law code, the Sulkhan Arukh, compiled several centuries ago on the basis of the Talmud and required in practice to this day. In the introduction to the book the head of KEROOR, Rabbi Zinoviy Kogan makes the frank acknowledgement (the italics are ours) [JJ: There were no italics in the copy as received. We have italicized only according to convention: book titles, foreign words and phrases, etc.] that:

“The editorial council of KEROOR considered it necessary in this translation to omit some instructions of the halakha [Jewish law] ... whose inclusion in the publication in the Russian language would be perceived by the population of Russia, which does not adhere to Judaism, as an unprovoked insult. The reader who wishes to read the Kitsur Shulkhan Arukh in the ideally complete volume, is invited to come to a yeshiva in order to study this and many other holy books in the original.”

That is, one of the leaders of Russian Jewry himself recognized that some regulations of the Judaic code of behavior were insulting to the non-Jewish population of Russia, but considers it possible to invite his fellow tribesmen to yeshivas—the Jewish schools, which are financed from the state and local budgets—to study these insults. Yet, even in this expurgated publication we find the following provisions:

-In the “Laws about the idolatry” it is stated that “it is forbidden to use the figure of two crossed sticks, which they worship.” That is to say, Christianity is considered a variety of idolatry and all regulations regarding relations with idolaters (“akum”) imply in Russia (a country where the Orthodox religion predominates), first of all, the Orthodox Christians (page 389).

-The instruction on seeing a “house of idolatry” (i.e., place of worship) is to pronounce this curse upon it: “G-d will uproot the house of the proud,” and at the sight of a destroyed temple one is to exclaim: “The G-d of retribution has appeared!” Moreover, this opinion on the instruction is also advanced: “some maintain that this pertains to the houses of the non-Jews, who live in the world, calm and wealthy.” (pp. 389-390)

-Non-Jews are equated with excrement. (pp. 47 and 48)

-It is prohibited to train non-Jews in a craft. (p. 390)

-“The Jewess ought not to help non-Jews with childbirth.” (p. 390)

-“If a man took a loan from a non-Jew who then died, the man has the right to refuse to pay back the loan to the deceased’s son, who does not know accurately whether or not this Jew was in debt to his father.” (p. 405)

-In money calculations “If a non-Jew made a mistake against himself, it is permitted to use his error.” (p. 406)

-“It is forbidden to betray Jew into the hands of a non-Jew, whether the matter has to do with the Jew’s life or his property; and it does not matter whether this is done by some action or by words; and it is forbidden to report him or to point out the places where he has hidden his property.” (p. 408) We imperatively request that it be noted that this concerns the behavior prescribed for Jews in the context of investigations and trials.

Of course, among the thirteen major principles of Judaism is the requirement that they must await a Jewish world ruler who will appoint Jews to rule above other peoples of the world: “Unconditionally do I believe in the arrival of the mashiakh [messiah], and, although his coming may be delayed, nevertheless each day I will await him.” (p. 485)

In the teachings of the Orthodox Church this expected ruler of the world is identified with the antichrist, about whom Jesus Christ warned (John 5:43), as did the Apostle Paul (2 Thess. 2), and the holy fathers of the Church. This is an important and integral part of Orthodox teachings.

In the introduction to this book the head of KEROOR writes that “the Talmud is the unsurpassed monument of Jewish genius,” and this distillation of its morality, “the Kitsur Shulkhan Arukh is the anthology of the Jewish civilization of our time.... This book is completely necessary for you. You can act in the manner that it prescribes and be confident that you have carried out the will of the Ex-ltd.”

And the Chief Rabbi of Russia, Adolf Shayevich, notes in the preface: “Interest in this book exceeded our most daring expectations. A huge quantity of grateful responses from the most different people has continued all this time to come in to our address. An even larger quantity of letters contain imperative requests for help in acquiring this publication.”

We would suppose that already on the basis of this one official Jewish publication the law-enforcement agencies should, in accordance with article 282 of the Criminal Code of the Russian Federation, suppress the propagation of a religion that kindles hatred among the Jews for the rest of the “population of Russia”. All the more, if we take a glance at “the ideally complete volume of the unsurpassed monument of Judaic morals”—the Shulkhan Arukh, that is studied in the yeshivas.

We will use translations of it from the Amsterdam Judaic publication, made by a judicial expert, the Hebrew scholar Dr. K. Ecker, for the court trial in Germany in 1883 (Dr. K. Ecker. Der “Judenspiegel” im Lichte der Wahrheit, eine wissenschaftliche Untersuchung. Paderborn. 1884; Russian translation: Dr. K. Ecker. Yevreyskoe zertsalo v svete istiny. Nauchnoe issledovanie. Moskva, 1906).

This legal case was brought to court by Jews who were upset because one of their tribesmen, Justus Brieman, converted to Christianity and published the anti-human laws of the Shulkhan Arukh and of the Talmud. The law court ruled that the man who published the work was in the right, after finding that his translation corresponded to the original text. Dr. Ecker only corrected small inaccuracies. We will cite below characteristic extracts from the text as corrected by him, together with the references to specific Jewish sources (drawing confidence from both the qualifications of the German Hebrew scholar and the authority of the German law court).

-“His [the non-Jew’s] seed is considered like the seed of cattle.” (Tosefta—an addition to the Talmud. Ketubot, 3 b). “For [dead] servants and maids ... words of comfort should not be said to their relatives, but it is necessary to say to him [the Jewish master]: ‘may God compensate you for your loss’, just as one says to a man whose bull or donkey has died.” (Iore de'a 377-1)

—“It is forbidden to save them [non-Jews, akums] when they are close to death. For example, when you see that one of them has fallen into the sea, do not rescue him, even if he wants to pay.... It is permitted to test medicine on an akum to see whether or not it is effective.” (Iore de'a 158-1)

—“The money of akums is essentially like goods with no owner, and the one who arrives first may take possession of them.” “With respect to an akum there is no fraud.” (Khoshen ha-mishpat 156-5, Khaga; 227-26; 348-2, Khaga).

—“When a Jew has robbed an akum and they force him [the Jew] to take an oath, then he must in his heart proclaim his oath invalid, because he has been forced to take it.” (Iore de'a 329-1, Khaga). Note: This again concerns the behavior of Jews during investigations and trials!

—“When it has been established about someone that he has betrayed a Jew or his money three times to an akum, then it is necessary to seek out ways and means to squeeze him out of the world.” “As to expenditures needed for squeezing a traitor from the world, all the inhabitants of a locality are obliged to contribute.” (Khoshen ha-mishpat 388-15 and -16).

—“It is permitted to kill a traitor in any place, even in our time. It is permissible to kill him early, before he manages to make a denunciation [powerful enough to cause ‘bodily or monetary loss, no matter how small’] ... and everyone who is the first to kill acquires merit.” (Khoshen ha-mishpat 388-10)

—“The Jew-free-thinker, i.e., he who carries out the divine service of akums ... to kill all such people is a good deed. When there is authority to kill them publicly by the sword, then let this be carried out; but if there is not, then they must be entangled in every way possible in order to cause to them death. For example, when you see that one of them has fallen into a well and in the well there is a ladder, then hurry to take out it, saying: ‘I have a major concern; I need to get my son down from the roof, and I will bring it right back to you,’ or something like that.” (Khoshen ha-mishpat 425-5)

Provocateurs and Haters of Humanity

It should be noted that even the last prescriptions for killing—are to this day is not only theory, but also practice. Thus, the former chairman of Kharkov Jewish community E. Khodos published proofs (“An Axe above Orthodoxy, or who killed my father”, Kharkov, 1999) showing that members of the Jewish Chabad movement carried out the 1990 murder of priest-Jew Father Aleksandr Men’ (who “carried out the divine service of the Akums” and dreamed about the creation of a “Jewish Orthodox Church”, something that is considered a criminal offense according to the laws of the state of Israel). But the authorities in the Russian Federation have not been interested in such evidence. Criminals are supposed to be sought only among “Russian anti-Semites”.

We would like to emphasize that the majority of anti-Jewish actions throughout the world are constantly arranged by Jews themselves with the purpose of provoking punitive measures against patriots. The best-known case in Russia is that of Arkady Norinsky, who in 1988 sent out anti-Semitic leaflets in the name of the organization “Pamyat” in order to impel authorities to suppress it. In this he had the help of his fellow tribesman, the editor in chief of the journal Znamya, G. Baklanov, who published the leaflet in a print run of several millions. It was only after this that the provocation was uncovered. (Znamya No. 10, 1988; Pravda, 19 November 1988; Komsomol'skaya Pravda, 24 November 1988; Ogonyok No. 9, 1989)

From recent cases it is possible to mention a strange series of reports of vandalism that took place in 1998 and 1999. On the night of 13 May 1998, an explosion occurred at a synagogue in the Mar'inaya grove in Moscow damaging a wall. During the same day “a burning canister of gasoline” was placed not far from the synagogue in Otradny. In Irkutsk “a Jewish cemetery was desecrated”—of course the uproar in the international media was loud and all of them put the blame, without any evidence, on some sort of Russian Nazis (Nezavisimaya Gazeta, 15 May 1998).

But when shortly after that, in 1999, a synagogue in Birobidzhan was destroyed, it was established in court that the Jews themselves hired a man to do this (Radonezh, 1999, No. 15-16), but the democratic mass media were silent about this.

On the basis of the rules and practices of Jewish behavior that have been cited above, it is not difficult to understand why a constant companion of Jews among all peoples has been notorious “anti-Semitism”, i.e., the non-acceptance of Judaic morality. For this very reason Jews did not have an equality of rights in the Christian states and attained it only as a result of anti-monarchist bourgeois revolutions.

Thus in the Russian Empire, the Jews, after unsuccessful attempts by the Tsarist government to give them the status “of everybody else”, lost their equality in the 19th Century, not because they were Jewish by blood—since the empire was multinational; nor because they were not Christian—since the Muslims and Buddhists and others were not Christians either; but because the Jewish religion is anti-Christian and misanthropic to the point of ritual murder. Many examples of this ritual extremism were documented in courts. (For example, see the study of the well-known scholar V. I. Dal', Rozyskanie o ubinenii yevreyami khristianskikh mladentsev i upotreblenii krovi ikh [“Criminal investigation into the murder by Jews of Christian infants and the use of their blood.”] St. Petersburg, 1884).

To all this it is possible also to add the words of the Prayer of Shefokh, in which the Jews on the eve of their Passover issue a call their “god” “to exterminate from the universe” all other peoples.

Jewish Aggressiveness as a Form of Satanism

The spiritual reason for this hatred of humanity is explained in the Gospels in the words of Christ regarding the Jewish spiritual leaders who rejected the Son of the God: “Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning ...” (John 8:19-44).

This elucidation of Judaic aggressiveness as a form of Satanism is generally accepted in Orthodoxy. Well-known philosopher-intellectuals who cannot be suspected of anti-Semitism expressed it. For example, A.F. Losev (in Istochnik Moscow, 1996, No. 4. pp. 117-122), Father Pavel Florensky (in the book Sakharna, by V. V. Rozanov, Moscow. Izdatel'stvo Respublika, 1998, p. 360), and Father Sergiy Bulgakov: “the Jews who were rejecting Christ became the “laboratory for all sorts of spiritual diseases, poisoning the world and particularly Christian humanity.” (Vestnik RKhD, Paris, 1973 No. 108-110. p. 72) Even the Judeo-Christian Father Aleksandr Men', who was struggling against “anti-Semitism”, asserted that the Jew who rejects Christianity, “betrays himself and easily falls under the power of dark forces” (the journal Yevrei v SSSR, 1975, No. 11).

This, unfortunately is what happened with the larger part of the Jewish people (in contrast to its smaller part, which accepted Christianity). But they do not want to recognize this and believe that that statement of the truth by Christ and after him by Orthodox Christians is “insulting” to the Jews. Jewish plaintiffs frequently direct their charge of “anti-Semitism” against this essential part of Orthodox doctrine itself, demanding that it actually be banned (as in the case with the textbook Osnov pravoslavnoy kul'tury [“Bases of Orthodox Culture”]).

But we cannot agree with banning the Orthodox doctrine about the idea of history as the struggle of the forces of good (on the side of the Church) against the forces of evil (the side opposed to religion, that prepares for the reign of the antichrist).

Following the precepts of the Orthodox Fathers of the Church, we also cannot follow the false understanding that is spreading according to which tolerance is humbleness before the sin, evil, heresies, and in this case Satanism. The Christian must precisely from the respect for the image of God placed in each person, and for the sake of saving his soul, frankly indicate to Jews their dangerous deviation from the truth into Satanism. It is in this that, from a Christian point of view, the manifestation of authentic love for people consists. “Tolerant” indulgence of heresies and Satanism only contributes to their spiritual loss—and under their strong pressure—to that of their many victims.

One should immediately answer also the possible objection that the Russian patriots, who level charges at the Jews, do not always distinguish between religious and non-religious Jews, particularly since the majority of Jews do not consider themselves believers in Judaism and do not study the Shulkhan Arukh. But many generations of the self-contained life of Jews among other peoples (in this context there developed the idea of the Jewish kahal as a “state within a state”—see the books by Jewish authors: Antisemitizm v drevnem mire [“Antisemitism in the ancient world”] by S. Lur'e and the Kniga Kagala [“The Book of the Kahal”] by Yakov Brafman) led to the situation where the morality of the Shulkhan Arukh became a part of Jewish national self-consciousness even in its secular form. This conclusion was drawn by the well-known Jewish writer and sociologist Hannah Arendt:

“Precisely in the process of secularization was borne completely real Jewish chauvinism. ... The idea of the chosenness of the Jews became ... the idea that Jews supposedly were the salt of the earth. From now on, the old religious concept of chosenness was no longer the essence of Judaism; it became instead the essence of Jewishness.” (Antisemitizm// Sintaksis, Paris, No. 26, 1989) [English readers see Arendt, The Origins of Totalitarianism, New York: Schocken, 2004, p. 99.]

This “real Jewish chauvinism” and the unceremonious spirit of the Shulkhan Arukh were clearly visible in the course of the destruction the USSR and the post-communistic reforms in our country and were expressed in the illegal appropriation of state property as “goods with no owner”, and also in the composition of the new ruling stratum. “The government is full of Jews,” acknowledged the Rabbi Adolf Shayevich (NH- Figury i lits”, 1998, No. 16). Thus, their corresponding influence on the life of the country proved to be completely disproportionate to their numbers (0,16 % according to the data of last census) to the detriment of the interests of all the other peoples of the country and especially the Russian people who formed the country.

The Jewish Revolution

The well-known Jewish publicist L. Radzikhovskiy calls this a 'democratic-capitalist revolution' and says: "The Jewish and Jewish-oriented intelligentsia, which constitutes in Russia one of the chief carriers of western-liberal ideology, became the ideologist of this revolution." Therefore "Jews have a larger specific weight in Russian politics and business than in the politics and business of any other Christian country." This he calls the "good luck of the Jews" which was also the title of his article ("Yevreyskoe schast'e" in Novoe Russkoe Slovo, 17 January 1996).

The Jewish oligarchs themselves frankly described on Israeli television (2nd program, 3 October 1996) the sources of their "good luck" in the revolution that they perfected (the italics are ours) [Jl: There were no italics in the text as received.]:

"The degree of corruption in Russia completely corresponds to the degree of transformations in Russia. I do not think that in the hands of the officials of Israel ... there is the possibility to redistribute wealth worth tens, hundreds of millions and billions ... this was—no one's, this was—the state's, this was everyone's! So here, an official had the capability to determine by drawing up a list: this belongs to you, or to someone else.... A good fight, which led to the result that we have today." (Boris Berezovsky)

"Incomes like this and profits like this, which could be earned in Russia, could not be earned anywhere else.... A big share of capital there, 50 percent, belongs to Jewish business" (Vitaly Malkin, now a member of the presidium of Russian Jewish Congress).

Vladimir Gusinsky, the first chairman of Russian Jewish Congress, in that broadcast said that one of the reasons for Jewish luck is their "ferocity". "It is not so much the rules; it is more the rule of force, it is more the rule of aggression."

"For the first time in thousands years, since the moment the Jews settled in Russia, we have obtained real authority in this country," states another Jewish writer, E. Topol', in an "Open letter to Berezovsky, Gusinsky, Smolensky, Khodorkovsky and the rest of the oligarchs" ("Otkrytoe pis'mo Berezovskomu, Gusinskomu, Smolenskomu, Khodorkovskomu i ostal'nyim oligarkham," in Argumenty i Fakty, 1998, No 38). In this connection, Topol' and other sensitive Jews (for example, Yu. Nudel'man in Sovyetskaya Rossiya, 20 June 2002) emphasize that the destructive and self-interested policy of Jewish oligarchs, which degrades the Russian people, provokes the hostility of the Russian people to the Jews. This obvious fact was noted even by the ambassador of the Kingdom of Belgium to the Russian Federation, André Mernier, in his final report on his work, sent out to all foreign embassies and to his colleagues in the diplomatic corps in September 2004, before his departure from Moscow.

We request that the Procurator General's office regard this opinion of Topol' and Nudel'man as an acknowledgement that it is the accusing (Jewish) side that is responsible for the contemporary aggravation of the Russo-Jewish conflict.

This is especially true, given the fact that in order to keep their authority and their illegally seized "un-owned" state property, this ruling stratum conducts a policy designed to bring about the decay of the people's morals and the removal of spiritual values, attempting to turn the people into an animal mass without faith and tradition—the more easily to govern them and the more easily to suppress their resistance.

In particular, it was precisely the Jews who put up furious resistance to teaching Osnov pravoslavnoy kyl'tury ["The Bases of Orthodox Culture"] in the schools, and it is precisely on the initiative of Jews that we, the Russian people who formed the country, are forbidden to indicate our nationality in our passports. The Chief Rabbi of the Russian Federation, Adolf Shayeich, in an interview with the Los Angeles Times (1 October 1997) confirmed that precisely the Jews insisted on the eliminating the entry for "nationality" [in passports], and he explained the reason for this by citing the fact that "Jews have taken high posts in the administration." That is, even they themselves realize what kind of idea non-Jews have formed about their nationality, and therefore they attempt to hide their nationality. This also says a lot.

Among the other numerous examples of the removal of spiritual values we cannot but draw your attention, Mr. Procurator General, to the policy of the Minister of Culture Mikhail Shvydkoy (who now leads a government agency for the matters of culture) and its television program Kul'turnaya revolyutsiya ["Cultural Revolution"], in which Russian patriotism and Orthodox traditions regularly are degraded. It propagandizes obscenity and the idea that sex is the engine of culture (7 March 2002). All protests of the Russian community against the scandalous and, in essence, provocative activity of this "chief man of culture in the country" have proven futile.

Moreover Shvydkoy and his associates have the central channels of Russian television at their disposal for their attacks, while the Orthodox patriot defendants have the tiny print runs [of publications], for which they are investigated and brought to trial. This inequality of opportunity can also lead them involuntarily to the excessive emotionalism, especially when they rebuff the blasphemous and insolent anti-Russian actions of persons of Jewish origin.

But this emotionalism of defendants driven into a corner should not be mixed up with aggressive, offensive emotionalism. The Orthodox person is not allowed to be aggressive, but he is called on to protect its people and their sacred things. The example of this was given by Christ Himself, who by the whip was banished from the temple by the merchants who had profaned it.

What is permissible to whom?

In comparison with the statements of the accused Russian patriots, much more aggressive statements by Jews regarding non-Jews are printed in Jewish newspapers published in the Russian Federation. For example, in the organ of the Russian Jewish Congress, Yevreyskie Novosti (2002, No. 16, page 9) the Knesset deputy A. Lieberman called for the forcible expulsion of the Palestinians from Israel. Accordingly the Palestinians—in violation of UN Security Council resolutions!—are not only thrown out of their homeland (4 million refugees), but their activists are murdered along with their families. Thus does the Shulkhan Arukh show up in the state policy of Israel.

And the Jews of the Russian Federation support it. The Russian Jewish Congress states that one of its aims is "to conduct actions of solidarity with the people of Israel, carrying out political lobbying for the interests of Israel" (Yevreyskie Novosti, 2002 No. 15, p. 5). The same goal is also pursued by the state Institute for the Study of Israel and the Near East, the leader of which, Yevgeny Satanovsky, simultaneously headed the Russian Jewish Congress.

Jewish communities all over the world carry out similar "political lobbying" for the interests of international Jewry to the detriment of the interests of the countries in which they live, and particularly in the USA. That state has become an instrument for the attainment of the global aims of Jewry. And they try to mask the racism of their Shulkhan Arukh by slapping the charge of anti-Semitism (i.e., allegedly racial hatred) on all those who do not agree with their morality, their activities, their wars.

But such a reversal of concepts is a crude forgery, as should be clear to any impartial judge. One can say that the whole democratic world today has fallen under the financial and political control of international Jewry, of which eminent bankers (Jacques Attali and others) are openly proud. And we do not see it as desirable that our Russia, against whose revival a permanent preventive war without rules is being conducted, should wind up among such unfree countries.

Therefore we, both in order to protect our fatherland and for personal self-defense, are forced to turn to you, Mr. Procurator General, with the imperative request that within the shortest period you verify the scandalous facts presented above and, if they are confirmed, on the basis of the corresponding articles of the Criminal Code of the Russian Federation's Law "on opposing extremist activity" (2002) and article 13 of the Constitution of the Russian Federation ("the creation and activity of public associations, the aim of which is directed towards kindling social, racial, national, and religious discord are prohibited") to officially institute proceedings for the prohibition in our country of all religious and national Jewish associations as extremist. We also request that persons responsible for assigning to these associations state and municipal property, privileges, and state financing, be called to account regardless of the posts they occupy.

Our first focus article reinforces Soltec's comments regarding the Cascadia Subduction Zone risks to the West Coast [emphasis added]:

NEW FINDINGS SUPER-SIZE OUR TSUNAMI THREAT

By Tom Paulson, Seattle Post-Intelligencer, 2/7/05

Scientists studying the Indian Ocean tsunami have discovered startling evidence that the killer waves, at least for one coastal area in northern Indonesia, were much larger than earlier believed.

The new findings, of keen interest worldwide to researchers seeking insights into the mechanics of this disaster, also translate into a disturbing suggestion that the experts have significantly underestimated the magnitude of the tsunami threat in the Pacific Northwest and perhaps to coastal communities around the Pacific Ocean.

"It's just staggering," said Andrew Moore, a scientist at Kent State University who was on a research team, led by Yoshinobu Tsuji of the University of Tokyo, that recently returned from studying the wave's trail of destruction on the west coast of Sumatra.

Moore, Tsuji and their colleagues found preliminary evidence the tsunami's height along an extensive section of shoreline south of the city of Banda Aceh averaged about 80 feet above sea level, with "run-ups" on inland slopes often reaching well over 100 feet. They estimated the wave's average velocity on shore at 45 feet per second.

"It's mind-boggling to think about," said Vasily Titov, a mathematician and tsunami computer modeler at the Pacific Marine Environmental Laboratory in Seattle. The lab, operated by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, is host to some of the world's top tsunami scientists.

These findings, Titov said, will almost certainly prompt significant revisions to basic theory and the tsunami models—as well as a serious upgrade in the predicted size of the tsunami expected from a major quake off the coast of Washington and Oregon.

"Our worst-case scenario may not be the worst-case scenario," acknowledged Titov.

Most estimates of the Dec. 26 waves' maximum height above sea level (sometimes referred to as "flow depth" to distinguish it from onshore "run-up" heights) had put it at 30-35 feet—primarily in parts of Indonesia nearest the undersea earthquake.

Scientists studying the Indian Ocean tsunami, which killed at least 160,000 people, had heard the reports of higher waves—of branches and bark stripped off the first 80 feet of trees, of water marks and roof damage found at or beyond the height of six- or seven-story buildings—but most figured these were the results of the wave running up slopes or isolated instances of "focusing".

A tsunami wave can get "focused" or boosted suddenly in one location as it comes on land by undersea canyons or other near-shore geographical features or structures that squeeze the massive surge of water into a narrower outlet—much like a nozzle increases the force of the water coming out of a hose.

But Moore said his team's wave-height measurements were consistent over a long stretch of coastline and found well back from any slopes, indicating these were direct measurements of the overall elevation of this massive wall of water as it came on shore.

"It's just so far beyond what any of us have ever dealt with before," said Moore, who before moving East pursued tsunami research at the University of Washington.

It's also way beyond the scope of what most of the experts have been predicting will arise from the ocean depths the next time the Cascadia Subduction Zone erupts.

The Cascadia zone, encompassing western Washington and Oregon, is where two "tectonic" plates that make up the Earth's fractured crust collide. The offshore Juan de Fuca Plate runs into and dives under, or "subducts", the North American plate.

The plates move in a slow, subterranean collision at an average speed of four centimeters per year. It wasn't until the mid-1990s that it was widely recognized that Cascadia was an active subduction fault, capable of producing the planet's most massive kind of earthquake, centered some 100 miles offshore.

Since then, NOAA scientists have been working with the state Department of Natural Resources and others to create "hazard maps" that quantify the height and reach of a tsunami in certain communities at highest risk.

But the maps are based on a tsunami with a maximum wave height of about 30 feet.

"That was the best evidence available at the time," said Tim Walsh, chief hazards geologist with the state agency.

"That's already a huge, incredibly destructive wave," noted Titov. Until the Indian Ocean tsunami, he said, most experts would have thought it absurd to suggest a tsunami with an overall wave height greater than this.

But the tectonics of Cascadia and the undersea subduction fault near Sumatra that spawned the Dec. 26 tsunami are alarmingly similar, Walsh said. "We look a lot like the Indian Ocean," he said, which means they may need to incorporate some new, bigger numbers in the hazard maps.

...Another finding that may be of critical importance to communities farther from the coast, on the Strait of Juan de Fuca and in Puget Sound, was the Dec. 26 tsunami's ability to retain its force even when going around corners. Scientists studying the waves' behavior in Sri Lanka were stunned to see what happened on the leeward side of the island nation.

"It was fairly large in many locations on the west side, bigger than the numerical models predict," said Phil Liu, the Cornell University scientist who led an American survey team in Sri Lanka.

Given all this flood of surprising information emerging from studies of the Indian Ocean tsunami, Walsh said, officials may need to pursue a different, more comprehensive strategy assessing and seeking to mitigate the tsunami risk for the Pacific Coast.

A step in this direction locally may be taken later this week at a meeting to be held in the high-risk southwestern Washington community of Long Beach. The Coastal Tsunami Summit on Wednesday will feature tsunami experts from NOAA, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the U.S. Geological Survey and several state agencies.

...Though most of the new scientific findings are not on the meeting agenda, the question will likely arise: Could Long Beach and other Pacific Coast communities one day have to deal with a tsunami wave as high as a six-story building?

"That's the sixty-million-dollar question," Walsh said.

It has been speculated that the HAARP array is used to project energy around the world by creating lenses and mirrors in the ionosphere, which can be used to direct land-based energy streams. And we have already had some confirmation this system might have been involved with triggering the December 26 Sumatra earthquake, which some geophysicists now say actually measured 9.3, three times as powerful as first-week estimates (!!!). The original HAARP array consisted of 48 antennae. As the following article states, 132 antennae were added to the array in 2004 and 616 MORE antennae are to be added this year:

ANTENNA PRODUCTS CORPORATION

AWARDED CONTRACT

Business Wire, 2/7/05

PHAZAR CORP announced today that Antenna Products Corporation in Mineral Wells, Texas, a wholly owned subsidiary, was recently awarded a $3,723,531 firm fixed price subcontract from BAE SYSTEMS ATI for the production of 270 Low Band Antenna Matching Unit Assemblies and 346 High Band Antenna Matching Unit Assemblies. This equipment will be manufactured at Antenna Product Corporation's plant in Mineral Wells, Texas, and deliveries are scheduled to begin in June, 2005 and continue monthly through September, 2005. The equipment will be shipped to the High Frequency Active Auroral Research Program (HAARP) ionospheric research site near Gokona, Alaska, the site of the recently completed installation of an array of 132 crossed dipole antennas built and installed by Antenna Products Corporation in 2004.

Notwithstanding President Putin's low-key approach to criminal roundup in Russia, it now appears the enemy of our enemy has been targeted by our enemy, according to no less an authority than Michael Collins Piper:

NEO-CONS. ISRAELI LOBBY

DECLARE WAR ON PUTIN

Michael Collins Piper, American Free Press, 2/19/05

America's neo-conservative elite and their collaborators in the pro-Israel lobby in Washington have fired a first shot in the opening guns of a new Cold War being launched against Russian Premier Vladimir Putin.

Although it hasn't been reported widely in the America mass media, Senators John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Joe Lieberman (D-Conn.), two of the Israeli lobby's leading congressional stalwarts, introduced a resolution in the Senate on February 19, condemning Putin and urging President Bush to push for suspending Russia's membership in the G-8 group of industrial nations.

Latching on to the president's emphatic declaration in his January 20 inaugural address of a new global campaign by the United States for the promotion of "democracy", Lieberman announced that "President Putin's assault on democracy in Russia violates the spirit of the industrialized democracies and the letter of Russia's obligations to the Group of Eight. We must openly confront anti-democratic backsliding in Russia for the sake of all those who look to the United States as a beacon for freedom."

The resolution was designed to put President Bush on the spot, coming just as President Bush was preparing for his scheduled meeting with Putin in Slovakia on February 24. [Jl: Yes, right after Mr. Putin returns from his scheduled trip to IRAN.]

The motivation for the effort by the neo-conservatives and their congressional spokesmen to undermine Putin is quite clear, inasmuch as Putin recently challenged Bush and Israel by daring to say publicly that he (Putin) does not believe that Iran is seeking to build nuclear weapons of mass destruction.

Although the burgeoning hostility against Putin by the neo-conservatives has been widely hashed over in small-circulation pro-Israel publications and American Jewish community newspapers on a regular basis, it has only been of recent date that mainstream publications such as The Washington Post and the New York Times, to name the most prominent, have begun to echo those concerns about Putin, almost as if the big-name dailies were taking the lead from the other journals. Increasingly, however, the word that "Putin is a possible enemy" is now being breached to the average American, through the outlets of the mass media.

Reflecting on the fact that the media was increasingly promoting hostility to Putin, American Free Press noted on October 25, 2004 that the media's primary concern about Putin stems from the fact that he has been moving against the handful of billionaire plutocrats in Russia (many of whom also hold Israeli citizenship) who grabbed control of the Russian economy with the open connivance of then-Russian leader Boris Yeltsin, following the collapse of the old Soviet Union.

One American hard-line pro-Israel publication, The New Republic, raised the question on September 24, 2004: "Is Russia going fascist?" asserting that whether Putin personally remains in power or not, there is a growing movement "nationalist in nature" that holds great sway among the Russian population. TNR expressed concern that "a fascist revolution" could be in the offing, meaning a movement hostile to the Israeli oligarchs (with international criminal connections) who rule the Russian [economy]. Likewise, much earlier, in his 1995 book, Russia: A Return to Imperialism, Boston-University-based Israeli academic Uri Ra'anon sounded the concern that post-Soviet Russia may pose a threat to the West.

These works echo such writers as Jonathon Brent and Vladimir Naumov who, in their 2003 book, Stalin's Last Crime, published evidence that longtime Soviet leader Josef Stalin was almost certainly murdered in 1953 after he began moves toward exorcising Zionist influence in Soviet circles of power. They concluded by saying that "Stalin is a perpetual possibility", leaving open the theoretical proposition that Putin, or other would-be Russian leaders, may ultimately emerge as heir to Stalin's anti-Zionist legacy.

Essentially, with the American neo-conservatives (whose ideological godfathers are widely known as admitted ex-Trotskyite communists) now moving against Putin, it is as if we are seeing a rejuvenation of the war against Russian nationalism by the Trotskyites, retooled for 21st Century geopolitical considerations. Now—unlike in the first half of the 20th Century prior to the founding of the state of Israel—the central role of that Middle East state in the neo-conservative worldview cannot be understated, for the concern about Israel is a front-line consideration in the neo-conservative campaign against Putin.

Although Russia joined the G-8 nations (which includes Britain, Canada, Japan, France, Italy and Germany) in 2002, the companion resolutions in the Senate and the House ask the president to enlist the other G-8 countries to join with the United States in suspending Russia's G-8 membership until such time as President Bush decides that Russia is supposedly committed to so-called "democratic principles".

This is the second time that McCain and Lieberman introduced such a measure, although their last effort, in 2003, failed in committee. At that time, two other members of Congress, California Reps. Tom Lantos—a Democrat—and Christopher Cox—a Republican—introduced a companion resolution in the House of Representatives which reached the House floor, but it was never voted upon.

Speaking of neo-conservatives and supplementary to our focus on Michael "Diablo" Chertoff in the previous issue of CONTACT: John Dimitri Negroponte, who oversaw the death squads in Honduras and went on to serve as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations before becoming U.S. Ambassador to Iraq in the not-so-old Abu Ghraib-coverup days, is now the nominee for Director of Central Intelligence, the one man through whom all intelligence information from 15 separate agencies will flow and the man who will decide who is an "enemy of the state" and subject to "legal" human-rights abuses. As background, we cite excerpted information freely available through Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia (emphasis added):

JOHN NEGROPONTE
Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

John Dimitri Negroponte (born July 21, 1939) is the current United States ambassador to Iraq and the nominee as the first U.S. Director of National Intelligence. A career diplomat who served in the United States Foreign Service from 1960 to 1997, Negroponte served as the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations from September of 2001 until June 2004. As ambassador to Iraq, Negroponte oversees the largest American diplomatic facility in the world....

Ambassador to Honduras

From 1981 to 1985 Negroponte was the U.S. ambassador to Honduras. During his tenure, he oversaw the growth of military aid to Honduras from $4 million to $77.4 million a year. At the time, Honduras was ruled by an elected but heavily militarily-influenced government. According to the New York Times, Negroponte was allegedly involved in "carrying out the covert strategy of the Reagan administration to crush the Sandinistas government in Nicaragua". Critics say that during his ambassadorship, human rights violations in Honduras became systematic.

Negroponte supervised the construction of the El Aguacate air base where Nicaraguan Contras were trained by the U.S., and which some critics say was used as a secret detention and torture center during the 1980s. In August 2001, excavations at the base discovered 185 corpses, including two Americans, who are thought to have been killed and buried at the site.

Records also show that a special intelligence unit (commonly referred to as a "death squad") of the Honduran armed forces, Battalion 3-16, trained by the CIA and the Argentine military, kidnapped, tortured and killed hundreds of people, including U.S. missionaries. Critics charge that Negroponte knew about these human rights violations and yet continued to collaborate with the Honduran military while lying to Congress.

In May 1982, a nun, Sister Laetitia Bordes, who had worked for ten years in El Salvador, went on a fact-finding delegation to Honduras to investigate the whereabouts of thirty Salvadoran nuns and women of faith who fled to Honduras in 1981 after Archbishop Óscar Romero's assassination. Negroponte claimed the embassy knew nothing. However, in a 1996 interview with the Baltimore Sun, Negroponte's predecessor, Jack Binns, said that a group of Salvadorans, among whom were the women Bordes had been looking for, were captured on April 22, 1981, and savagely tortured by the DNI, the Honduran Secret Police, and then later thrown out of helicopters alive.

In early 1984, two American mercenaries, Thomas Posey and Dana Parker, contacted Negroponte, stating they wanted to supply arms to the Contras after the U.S. Congress had banned further military aid. Documents show that Negroponte brought the two together with a contact in the Honduran armed forces. The operation was exposed nine months later, at which point the Reagan administration denied any U.S. involvement, despite Negroponte's introductions of some of the individuals. Other documents detailed a plan of Negroponte and then-Vice President George H. W. Bush to funnel Contra aid money through the Honduran government.

During his tenure as U.S. ambassador to Honduras, Binns, who was appointed by President Jimmy Carter, made numerous complaints about human rights abuses by the Honduran military and claimed he fully briefed Negroponte on the situation before leaving the post. When the Reagan administration came to power, Binns was replaced by Negroponte, who has consistently denied having knowledge of any wrongdoing. Later, the Honduras Commission on Human Rights accused Negroponte himself of human rights violations.

Speaking of Negroponte and other senior U.S. officials, an ex-Honduran congressman, Efrain Diaz, told the Baltimore Sun, which in 1995 published an extensive investigation of U.S. activities in Honduras:

"Their attitude was one of tolerance and silence. They needed Honduras to loan its territory more than they were concerned about innocent people being killed."

The Sun's investigation found that the CIA and U.S. embassy knew of numerous abuses but continued to support Battalion 3-16 and ensured that the embassy's annual human rights report did not contain the full story.

The question of what John Negroponte knew about human rights abuses in Honduras will probably never be answered definitively, but there is a large body [of] circumstantial evidence supporting the view that Negroponte was aware that serious violations of human rights were carried out by the Honduran government, with the support of the CIA, if perhaps not with its direct approval. Senator Christopher Dodd of Connecticut, on September 14, 2001, as reported in the Congressional Record, aired his suspicions on the occasion of Negroponte's nomination to the position of UN ambassador:

"Based upon the Committee's review of State Department and CIA documents, it would seem that Ambassador Negroponte knew far more about government perpetuated human rights abuses than he chose to share with the committee in 1989 or in Embassy contributions at the time to annual State Department Human Rights reports."

Among other evidence, Dodd cited a cable sent by Negroponte in 1985 that made it clear that Negroponte was aware of the threat of "future human rights abuses" by "secret operating cells" left over by General Alvarez after his deposition in 1984.

Appointment to the UN

When President Bush announced Negroponte's appointment to the UN shortly after coming to office, it was met with scattered protest. Some critics asserted that the administration intentionally arranged the deportation from the United States of several former Honduran death squad members who could have provided damaging testimony against Negroponte in his Senate confirmation hearings.

One of the deportees was General Luis Alonso Discua, founder of Battalion 3-16. In the preceding month, the U.S. government had revoked the visa of Discua, who was Honduras' Deputy Ambassador to the UN. After returning to Honduras, Discua stated that, in 1983, he had been brought to the United States to spend two months organizing Battalion 3-16.

Negroponte in Iraq

On April 19, 2004, Negroponte was nominated by U.S. President George W. Bush to be the U.S. ambassador to Iraq after the June 30 handover of sovereignty. He was confirmed by the United States Senate on May 6, 2004, by a vote of 95 to 3, and was officially sworn in on June 23, 2004, replacing L. Paul Bremer as the U.S.' highest ranking American civilian in Iraq.

In the months Negroponte spent as U.S. Ambassador to Iraq he received plaudits, even from Bush administration critics such as Fred Kaplan, for his removal of corruption, graft and sycophants from the U.S. civilian presence in Iraq.

National Intelligence Director Nominee

On February 17, 2005, President George W. Bush named Negroponte as the first Director of National Intelligence, a position created due to recommendations made by the 9/11 Commission completed late in 2004. As with many presidential appointments, Negroponte must be confirmed by the Senate.

NEVADA CORPORATIONS:

Stay Small Or Increase Substance In Nevada

Budget's "Tip of the Week" #18:More on "Nexus" and "Substance"

Two legal issues crop up when operating a Nevada corporation which might have some activities in a foreign jurisdiction: "nexus" and "substance". Without getting into a full-blown legal definition for the purposes of this discussion, nexus can be considered equivalent to the related word, "connection". And for purposes of this discussion we can consider the legal issue of "substance" to mean "physical presence".

We have previously pointed out a list of conditions under which a Nevada corporation is not considered to be "doing business" in a foreign jurisdiction. It may, for instance, use an independent contractor to effect sales outside of Nevada, as long as each sale is not considered final until accepted in Nevada. If, however, a Nevada corporation has significant nexus in (connection to) another jurisdiction, in many cases the tax-hungry foreign state will seek to extend its tax laws to compel the Nevada corporation to pay some home-state taxes. A Nevada corporation with little presence in Nevada but which provides all sorts of equipment to an independent contractor working in, say, California could find itself under attack from the California Franchise Tax Board.

So far, at least, there are very few examples of small, private situations undergoing such scrutiny. However, in cases where the amounts of revenue derived from the foreign jurisdiction are large enough to present a "target of opportunity", various states are becoming increasingly aggressive in extending their tax tentacles. In auditing such a situation the home-state taxation authority will pose many questions relating to the "substance" (physical presence) of the Nevada corporation in Nevada.

Actual audit questions in establishing the substance of the Nevada corporation in Nevada can be very detailed and probing, including but not limited to the following: employees (compensation, responsibilities, payroll returns); identification of officers and compensation; copies of phone bills; actual payments made on notes; list of suppliers and professional-service providers; where decisions are made regarding investments; copies of corporate records including minutes and resolutions; banking (copies of all bank statements, checks and deposit slips).

The Nevada Department of Taxation uses the following criteria to evaluate nexus in Nevada: use of an office, distribution house, warehouse, service enterprise or other place of business; maintenance of a stock of goods; solicitation of orders by employees or independent contractors; regular engagement in the delivery of property in this state, other than by common carrier or United States mail; or regular engagement in any activity in connection with the leasing or servicing of property which is located within this state.

From the foregoing it should be obvious that it is always best to remain small in order to keep the bureaucrats out of your private business affairs whenever possible. And if and when your business grows to become a substantial potential target, it may become necessary to broaden its Nevada base, in order to retain more "substance" in Nevada relative to "nexus" in the foreign jurisdiction.
